

A N HISTORY
O F

Apparitions, Oracles, Prophecies, and Predictions,

*With Dreams, Visions,
and Revelations.*

AND THE
Cunning Delusions of the DEVIL, to strengthen the Idolatry of the GENTILES, and the Worshipping of Saints departed;
With the Doctrine of Purgatory.

A Work very seasonable, for discovering the Impostures and Religious Cheats of these Times.

Collected out of sundry Authours of great Credit; And delivered into English from their several Originals,

By T. B.

Whereunto is annexed,
A Learned TREATISE, confuting the Opinions of the SADDUCES and EPICURES, (denying the appearing of Angels and Devils to Men) with the Arguments of those that deny that Angels and Devils can assume Bodily shapes.

Written in FRENCH, And now rendred into ENGLISH,
With a Table to the whole Work.

LONDON,
Printed by John Streater, dwelling in Well-Yard, near the Hospital of S. Bartholomews the Lesse, 1658.

AN HISTORY OF

Revolutions
and Revolutions
in the World

Gunning Delusions of the P. B. A. to strengthen the Idolatry of the Lord of the Hosts

A Work very Reasonable for discovering the impostures and religious errors of the times

Containing a full and complete History of the Church and State of England from the Reformation to the present time

By A. B.

A Learned Treatise, containing the opinions of the SADDUCEES and PHARISEES, (displaying the oppositions of Angels and Devils to Man) with the Arguments of those who hold that Angels and Devils can assume bodily shapes.

Written in 1728, and now published into English.

Which a Topic to the whole Work.

Printed by J. B. in the Hospital at 2. North Street, London, 1728.

TO THE HONOURABLE

THE

Lord Cholmley, Lord Viscount Kell, &c.

My Lord,

Should in the first place (if possible) anticipate your wonder, when these rude Lines shall plainly salute You, Defender and Protector of their Innocencie: Since I, who have thus preposterously run them, am not so happy as to be known to Your Honour. I shall therefore humbly take leave to declare the grounds of this my presumption (for I dare not call it otherwise, unless by your permission). The first is, your unbounded Goodnesse; to which I am relatively obliged, and much acquainted by the frequent commemorations of my nearest Relation, whose Father had the happiness to live and die under the benevolent influence of your voluntary Service; And, by the Information of those whose expressions proceed from the dictates of their own Experience, find, That where You have once obliged any by Your incomparable benignity, Your favours flowed down infinitely to all Relations. The next is, The Worthiness of those Learned Authours, by whose Care and Industry these Examples were left for the use of future Ages: whose Ashes might justly rise up against me, if (being so unworthy to mention, much less to collect their Labours myself) I should not commend them to the Patronage of one most Noble and Ingenious: Nor do I conceive it the lightest consideration, That Your Lordship being acquainted with these Collections in their severall Originals, must necessarily (for the communicative quality inherent in all truly noble and generous dispositions) with they were accommodated to the apprehensions of inferiour capacities.

I shall not trouble Your Honour with what Motives I had for exposing this work to publick View; Since these so much Saducean and Socinian Times, most loudly, proclaim an eminent necessity of utmost endeavours in this particular: And since it is the duty of all men, to study rather the Publick, than their own private, advantage.

The Epistle Dedicatory.

It being a Stranger, needs the more Encouragement. Besides, being usher'd into this our English World by so unworthy a hand, must consequently participate of the weakness of my endeavours: But however defective, or exposed to injury, Your acceptance will abundantly supply it, and your Patronage secure it from the imputation or prejudice of any Manners.

Should I further question that invincible Courtship which I hear every where extoll'd, I might thereby aggravate, instead of extenuating, my Presumption. Therefore I shall cease to trouble you further, but with this one request, That You will favourably interpret my Boldness in subscribing my self;

My Lord,

Your Honours most humbly devoted Servant,

Thomas Bromhall.

A

A Catalogue of the Authors out of which these Stories and Examples are selected.

A.
A Don Viennensis.
A. Elianus.
Emilius.
Aeneas Sylvius.
Agatinus.
Alexander ab Alexan-dro.
Antonius Beneventus.
Antonius de Turgue-mada.
Apollonius.
Apulejus.
Artunus.
Athenaus.
Aventinus.
Augustinus.

B.
B Artholomeus Bononiensis.
Benno Cardinalis.
Blondus.
Bonfinius.

C.
C Arolus Magnus.
Caspar Goldwurm.
Caspar Peucerus.
Cassiodorus Remius.
Catalogus Treuerensis.
Cedrenus.
Chronicon Castinense.
Chronicon Helvetia.

Chronicon Saxonia.
Cicero.
Cælius.
Collexutius.
Cromerus.
Cuspinianus.

D.
D Ilys.
Diodorus Sicu-lus.
Diogenes Laertius.
Dion Cassius.
Dion Nicæus.
Dositheus.

E.
E Gnatus.
Erasmus Rottero-damus.
Euagrius.
Eunapius.
Eusebius.
Eustachius.

F.
F Ranciscus Petrarcha.
Francius.
Fulgus.

G.
G Ellius.
Georgius Agricola.

Georgius Sabinus.
Gilbertus Cognatus.
Gregoras.
Gregorius Turonensis.
Gulielmus Mamul-brucienfis.

H.
H Adriani Chronicon.
Haithonus Armenus.
Hector Boëthius.
Henricus Colonienfis.
Henricus Erfordienfis.
Hermanus Gygas.
Herodotus.
Hieronymus.
Hieronymus Cardanus.
Homerus.

I.
Jacobus Meyer.
Jacobus Rufus.
Jason Pratenfis.
Joachimus Camerarius.
Joannes Agricola.
Joannes Baptista Porta.
Neapolitanus.
Joannes Bodinus.
Joannes Fincelius.
Joannes Langius.
Joannes Magus.
Joannes Meyer.
Joannes Saxo, Gram-
mat.
Joannes Trithemius.
A Joannes

A Catalogue of Authors, &c.

Joannes Vicius.
Jobus Fincelius.
Iodocus Darmadann.
Iosephus.

L Aurentius Vall.
Leonides.
Lilius Gregorius Gy-raldus.
Livius.
Ludovicus Guicciardi-
nus.
Lycosthenes.

M Acrobis.
Malleus Maleficarum.
Mamelburienfis.
Manlius.
M. Frischi.
M. Paulus, Venetus.
Martinus Lutherus.
Marulus.
Metaphrastes.
Munsteri Cosmogra-phia.
Mutius.

N Aialis Comes.
Naclerus.
Nicephorus.
Nicias.
Nicolans.

O.

O Laus Magnus.
Ovidius.

P Aschafius.
Paulus Emilis.
Paulus Diaconus.
Paulus Grillandus.
Paulus Jovius.
Pausanias.
Petrus Ciezus.
Petrus Mamorius.
Philippus Melancthon.
Philostratus.
Platina.
Plinius.
Plutarchus.
Pollux.
Polydorus Virgilius.
Pontanus.

R.

R Abanus.
Ramulphus.
Regino.
Robertus Gaguinus.
Rutius.

S.

S Abellicus.
Schaffnaburgensis.
Servius.
Severus Sulpitius.
Sigebertus.

Sleidanus.
Socrates.
Sozomenus.
Stadius.
Stobaeus.
Strabo.
Suetonius.
Suidas.

T.

T Heodoretus.
Theodoric. Gref-mundus.
Theopompus.
Thomas Patriarcha Barbasienfis.
Turpinus, Remensis.

V.

V Aler. Maximus.
Vincentius.
Ulricus Molitor.
Volaterranus.
Vopiscus.
Urbanus.
Urspergensis.

W.

W Ernerus.

X.

X Iphilinas.

Z.

Z Onaraz.

AN

AN HISTORY

OF
Most strange Phantasies and Apparitions, with the various sleights and cunning delusions of Devils.

Marcus Brutus and Cassius, who had murther'd Caesar, came together to Sardis, where it is reported, Brutus was accosted with a horrible Vision. He was a man, naturally very watchfull, and one so laborious and continent, that he afforded himself but a very small part of his time to sleep in. In the day he rested not at all, in the night very little; and that when (all men being drown'd in sleep) he had neither any employment to do, nor person to converse with. And, at that time, being engaged in a War, and agitating things of a most high concernment, he was so carefull and intent concerning the prosecution and event of those affairs, that, having first (for a short space) refresh'd himself with sleep after Supper, he wholly set apart the rest of the night for the promoting of his urgent occasions. And if it happened, that he had finished his business before, he betook himself to his study untill the third watch; when, all his Centurions and Tribunes were wont to repair unto him. When he was (I say) at Sardis, and projecting how to convey his Army out of Asia, in the beginning of the night the Moon began to abate of her wonted lustre, the Camp being in a deep silence. Whilst Brutus was deeply cogitating of some serious matters, he thought he heard the footsteps of some one near him; whereat he looking back towards the door, behold, a prodigious Apparition, one of a monstrous and horrid shape and bignesse stood by him, without speaking one word. Brutus, not without some reluctancy, ask't him, what Man or God art thou? or what is thy business here? The Vision answered, O Brutus, I am thy evil Angel, and thou shalt see me again at Philippi. At which Brutus nothing daunted said again, I shall then. But when it was vanished, he called together his Servants, who averred to him, they neither saw nor heard either Vision or voyce; after which Brutus took his rest again. When it was light, he went to Cassius, and told him of this Phantasm. When, after Cassius was slain at Philippi, whilst he prepared for a second fight, wherein he was conquered, after he had been Victor in the first. In the night (as the story sayes) the same Vision appeared again to Brutus in the same shape, not speaking a syllable, but so vanish. Plutarchus in Bruto.

I.

B

either

2.

When Marcus Antonius became bankrupt at Asium, Cassius of Parma his Partner fled to Athena; where, in the dead of the night as he lay in his bed ingulph't with cares and perplexities, he phantasied, a man of a monstrous magnitude, a black and ugly hue, his beard incompr and squalid, and his hair disorderly hanging down, came to him; And being askt who he was, answered, κακὸς ἀγγέλων, i. e. thy evil Angel, or Genius. Being at last affrighted with so horrid a presence, and so evil a name, he called to his servants, and questioned them, whether they saw one of such a dresse and visage either come in, or go out of his Chamber: and when they had assured him they saw none such, he again composed himself to his rest: but presently the same Phantasm haunted him; Wherefore he cast off all thought of rest, and commanded a Candle up to his chamber, and enjoyned his servants not to depart from him. Between this night and his execution inflicted by Cleopatra was but a very short interval, as you may read in Valerius Maximus l. 2. c. 7. and Suetonius in Aug. and Plutarch in Iusta Antonii.

3.

Dion of Syracuse, after the Syracusans were made free, and a little before he was slain by Calippus, as he sat by chance in his Porch in the evening full of careful thoughts, heard a sudden noise; and looking about him, (it being yet day-light) he saw a huge woman in face and habit nothing differing from a Tragick fury, sweeping the house with a Broom. He, very much terrified, called his friends, and acquainted them with the sight, and intreated them to stay and lodge with him that night, for he should sink under his terror, if they should leave him, and the Ghost haunt him again. The Ghost, indeed, troubled him no more; but his Son, being almost arrived to Manhood, by reason of some slight and puerile crosse, became so sorrowfull and enraged, that he precipitated himself from the house top, and so perished. Plutarchus in Dione.

4.

Alexander the third, King of Scots took to Wife Joan Sister to Henry the third, King of England; which Joan dyed without issue; after which he married Margaret, daughter of the same King Henry, who bare to him Alexander, David, and Margaret; All these dyed; yet the King not altogether despairing of an Heir and Successor of his body, married the third time one Iola, daughter of a Knight of Draconum; whilst by night they were celebrating the Wedding Feast, he saw the likeness of a dead Man follow the Dance. The same year the King was knockt off his horse and slain.

Hence

Hence arose all that sedition and destruction which blasted that, formerly, flourishing Kingdome. This fell out in the year of our Redempcion, M C C L. Cardanus de rerum varietate, l. 16. c. 93.

THere is a noble Family, and among the chiefest of Parma, called by the name of the Tortelli, which have a Castle, wherein there is a Hall; In it about the chimney, an old woman for this hundred years uses to appear when any of the Family dyeth, or is like to dye. On a time a gallant Matron, by name Paula of Barbia, which was one of the same family, when we were at Supper together at Belzoni, told me, that one of the Maids of the house was very ill, and that the old woman appeared; all were of opinion that she would dye: But it fell out otherwise, for she recovered; but another of the family which was well, dyed suddenly. They report, that this old woman, whose Ghost is now seen, was formerly very rich, and was by her own Nephews murdered for her moneys sake, and hackt in pieces, and thrown into the Privy, Cardanus, ibidem.

5.

A*Nonius Arceus Codrus*, a Grammarian of Bruxia, the very same night he dyed, thought he saw one of a huge magnitude, a bald pate, his beard hanging down to the ground, fiery eyes, carrying Torches in both hands, and terrible all over, and he spake to him thus; who art thou, which walkest up and down alone thus like a Fury, in that time of the night, when men are fastest asleep? Speak out, what dost thou look for? or whither goest thou? When he had thus said, he skipt out of his bed to avoid him, rushing in violently upon him, Bartholomaeus Bononiensis in ejus vita.

6.

J*acobus Dornatus*, Patricius of Venice, and also rich, when on a night sleeping with his Wife he had a taper light, and two Nurses also were asleep in a truckle-bed with a young child, not a year old, he saw the chamber door open by little and little, and a man, I know not who, put in his head; the Nurses also saw him, but no body knew him; The young man being affrighted, as well he might be, snatcht his Sword and Buckler, each of the Nurses great Tapers, into the Hall they come, which was near adjoyning to the Chamber, where all things were close. The young man comes back with great admiration, the small Infant, which was well in health, dyed the next day. Cardanus de Rerum varietate, lib. 16. cap. 93.

7.

V*hen Censius Rufus*, in his family notable for nothing of worth, did act as Quaestor at Adrumetum, a City of Africa, walking up and down at noon in the porch, he saw the shape of a woman of a more comely hue, far beyond any mortal creature, which spake unto him, Thou art Rufus, which shalt shortly come Vice-Consull into this Province. He being hopefully advanc'd with this prodigie, not long after enjoyed the Preconsulship of Africa by Tiberius

8.

herias Caesar, whereby the event of the Vision was fulfilled. Fulgosin lib. 1. cap. 6.

9.

E*dmund* being banished by Ethelfred King of the Northumbrians, fled to Redwaldus King of the Eas-Angles. Not long after, when Ethelfred by some in authority sought to kill him, he began to take great care to secure himself. In the night, when all was still, one of an unknown face and habit, having met with him, ask't him what he would give him, if he told him that which would free his mind from all manner of sadness. Edmund made him this answer, whatsoever was his, that he might lawfully request; and was in his power, that he will freely give him. Then he prognosticated to him, that so soon as he could make an escape out of his Enemies hands, he should then recover the Kingdom of his Ancestors, and when he had conquer'd his Enemies, he should enlarge it, both far and wide; immediately laying his hand upon the top of his head, he saith; When any one Edmund, shall come to you, after you enjoy your own, and shall in this manner lay his hand upon your head; be you then mindfull to keep thy promise. When he had done speaking thus, he on a sudden vanished. The young man being in a wonderfully manner transported with this Oracle, a long time ruminating within himself of this matter, durst not open it to any. But when Ethelfred was slain, he being brought home into his own kingdom by Redwaldus, being advised by Ethelberg his Wife, the sister of Edbaldus King of Kent, to embrace the Christian Religion; when he on purpose delayed the business, and could by no perswasion be made pliable, Paulinus a devout man, which by long intreating could do no good, in the interim being taught by an Oracle from Heaven, (as we must believe) came to him, who made stay at York, and putting his most sacred hand on his head, requested him, that he would call to mind what that meant. Edmund being amazed at the Oracles sudden issue, instantly fell down at the Prophets feet, and was with his fellow Christians washed in that holy Fountain. Anno 637. Polydon. lib. 4. Hist. Angl.

10.

M*accabaeus* Cosen German to Duncan King of Scotland and Banquo Stuart a valiant man travailing through a Forrest towards the Court, met three Women of an unwonted and strange habit and appearance. One of them said, Hail Macchabaeus, Thanus Gloriosus, which was a Title of Honour he had lately received. The second said to him, Hail Caldarius Thanus, another and higher title of honour; and the third, Hail Macchabaeus, Thou shalt hereafter become King. Then said Banquo, Me-thinks you are something unkind whosoever you are to prefer this man not onely above all the noble Men of the Land, but even unto the Throne, and give me no promotion at all. To this the first answered, Yea we declare unto thee far greater things than these; for this man, indeed, shall reign, but his dominion shall have an unhappy end with him for none of his posterity shall ever enjoy his Kingship after him: whereat (although thou shalt not become King thy self) thy posterity for a very long succession shall obtain and hold the Throne. When these words were ended, they all vanished out of their sight. At first these things passed as a vain phantasie: but when Maachabæus first ascended to the dignity of Caldarius, and afterwards beyond all expectation was made King, King Ducanus being slain; and having two Sons, he began to call to mind the Vision; and inviting Banubones, and his onely Son Fleanches to a Supper, by that means projected both their deatns: but when they had slain the Father, the Son, by the darknesse of the night, made an escape. At length Maachabæus was slain by Malcalinus the third Son of Ducanus and after many Generations the Kingdome fell into the hands of the Successours and Gran-children of Banubones Smar, and remains to this day in the possession of a daughter and heir of his Family, Cardan. l. 164. 23. xx Hæstoriæ Bibliæ.

H Otherus King of the Suedes and Danes, as he was a hunting having lost his company, as he wandred alone spied a company of Nymphs in a certain Den or covert, who promised him all good fortune, but withall advised him, that he should by no means wage war against Balderus King of the Danes who was a superlatively wise man, and one generated by a secret seed and production of the Gods. Having spoken these things, they suddenly vanished, and left Hotherus (who thought he had been in a Cave) in the open field. Some years after, (having commenced a war against Balderus, but hitherto with very ill successe) he chanced to light upon the same Vision; when he sadly bewailed to them his adverse fortune, and the sadnesse of his condition; nor would he cease his complaints untill they had made him a promise of better successe. The Nymphs told him (though he should seldome come off victor yet) that he should lose no more men then his enemy; and that he should obtain the victory if he could but find by what means to intercept certain food prepared for the Enemy to augment his force and courage. So he departed and rallied his forces. And whilst he diligently watched the Camp of the Enemy, he saw three Virgins go out who secretly used to carry them provision; whom he followed as fast as he could run, till at last they came to a house which they frequented; where, by the help of his Harp, (on which he plaid most sweetly) he got from them a most glorious Belt, and the powerfull girdle of Victory, and having returned the same way he went, met the Enemy, and overthrew him, so that the day after he was waſted over to Proserpina, who was seen to stand by him as he slept. Olaus Magnus, lib. 3. c. 10.

11.

C Julius Caesar, in his civill war, when he had gone as far as the Bank of Rubicon, is said to have stood at a pause, and considering with himself what a destruction the passing of that River would be to Mankind: whilst he stayed upon the bank he had an apparition; A man of an extraordinary bulk sitting upon the opposite 12.

posite bank playing upon a Pipe made of Reeds: And when, besides shepherds, many Souldiers, and amongst them some Trumpeters flock't to the Bankside to hear him, one of their trumpets leap't from him into the River, and with a very shrill voice began to sound an alarm, and so passed to the other side. Then Cesar said, Let us go, since the wonderfull signs of the Gods and the wickednesse of our Enemies thus invite us: The lot is now past, Sabellius l. 7. Ænead. 6.

13.

Pelopidas, General of the Theban Army, (whilst he encamped about the Leuſtrian field, where the daughters of Scedafus were entombed) saw Scedafus and his daughters; they lamenting about their Tombs, and cursing the Lacedemonians: and their father (who long before for that he had not revenged so horrid a crime, cursing the Lacedemonians, killed himself upon the tombs of his daughters) told him, If he would conquer the Lacedemonians, he must sacrifice a red Virgin to his daughters. But when this seemed something too barbarous a sacrifice, to appease the gods with a humane offering, not satisfied in his mind about it, at last a young Mare which had never taken horse, came from the herd and stood in that very place where he had consulted with the Ghost. And when Theocritus the Prophet saw the Mare was of a yellow shining colour, and proudly reining-in her neck, she pranced and neigh'd, he called Pelopidas with a loud voice, and said, that this was his offering, and that he could expect no other Virgin. Then they brought the Mare adorned with garlands to the Sepulchre, and there sacrificed her: Soon after, the Battle began, wherein the Lacedemonians received that memorable overthrow of Leuſtria by Ærotarchus and Pelopidas. Plutarchus in Pelopida.

14.

VHen: Gennadius the Chief of Constantinople, under Leo the Great Emperour, was by night standing at the Altar, and praying to God for the world, a certain evil spirit appeared to him, which being by him forc't away by his making a crosse, answered him thus in the voyce of a man; That as long as he liv'd indeed, he would avoid, and be at quiet, but afterward, he would leave no way unattempted to trouble the Church of God. Nicephorus lib. 15. cap. 23. Suidas. Geoprenus.

15.

A Little before that Henry the seventh Emperour dyed, and the slaughter of the chief Rulers of the Nation, as Musatus Patavinus, and Franciscus Petrarcha do history it, the Inhabitants of Mediolanum, in the house floor of Mattheus the chief Governour, who also merited the name of Mattheus the Great, when Sun was set, an armed horseman appear'd to him far bigger then the shape of man; when many for an hours space had beheld it, it then vanish'd away, with great terrour to the beholders. Likewise three dayes after at the third hour, in the very same place, two horsemen in the like shape, being seen skirmishing between themselves, vanished also. Sabellius libro 1. cap. 4.

Two

TWO famous Merchants, going into France through the groves near the Alpes in Italy, they met a man bigger then the ordinary size of men, he calling them suddenly, charged them thus: Speak to my Brother Ludovicus Sfortia, and give him these Letters from me. They being amazed, and enquiring, Who he was; he replied, That he was Galeasius Sfortia; and straightway he vanished from their sight. They returned in all haste to Mediolanum, from thence to Niglevanus, where Maurn lived. They presented their letters to the Prince, the Courtiers scoff at them; but they standing stiff in their errand, were cast into prison, and being put upon the wrack, they shewed by their constancy, that there was no fraud in them. In the mean while with great fear and astonishment they deliberated about opening the Letters. All the rest making doubt what to do; one Galecius, a Commander in chief feared not. The letter was folded up like a Bishops Writ (as they term it) very long, fastened with small instruments of brasse. The words whereof were these; O, O, O Ludovicus, take heed to thy self, For the Venetians and the French have conspired to ruine thee and thy off-spring. But if you will give me a thousand nobles, I will endeavour to reconcile their high spirits, and to turn away your ill fortune, and I doubt not to accomplish it, if you do not stubbornly refuse me. Farewell. The subscription was; The spirit of Galecius thy Brother. Here some being astonished at the strangeness of the thing, others laughing at the device, and most averring, he must put money into his hands: yer lest he should make himself a laughing stock, the Prince restrained this superstitious prodigality, and sent home the Merchants again. But in a short while after he was unthron'd by Ludovicus the Twelfth King of the French; and carried away prisoner. Arianus Sestian 1. historia Medionensi. oculatus testis.

16.

2.

THE Father of Ludovicus Alodisius, who was possessor of all the wealth of the City Imola, a little after he went from hence, appeared in a private place to the man in his journey, whom his sonne Ludovicus sent to a City in Italy called Ferraria, sitting on horseback with a hawk, (as 'twas his manner in hawking to hold him) and spake to him, although in great fear, to bid his sonne to come that very next day into the same place; for he would tell him of a business of great consequence. Hearing that; Ludovicus, both because he was incredulous thereof, and was also afraid of some treachery, sent another in his stead. That same ghost meeting him, which appeared before, was very sad that his son came not; for he said, he would tell him many more things: But at that time he bad him tell him onely this, That twelve years being expired, and one moneth, the day likewise being particularly set down, he should be no longer Governor of that City which he had. The time which the Ghost had foretold of was come; with great diligence in that very same night, which his Fathers evil Angels suspected, Philippus his Souldiers, Captain of the City Mediolanum, (with whom he had had made a Covenant, and therefore fear'd him not) the trenches being hard frozen, scaled the Walls, and with ladders took the City and its Governour. Sabeb. lib. 1. cap. 4. Exempl.

17.

18.

WHEN Constantinople was besieged by the savage Turks both by Land and Sea, There was seen at Come a City near adjoining to France, a great company of doggs whirried up and down in the Ayr, and after them flocks of diyers kinds of beasts, and as it were many footmen, first of a slender harness, then pikemen and other weapon'd men followed after, and horsemen followed them, divided into Troops, with a great Army set in battle array; They seemed for the space almost of three hours to be an Army at hand. At length a huge and formidable Man of a high stature, such as cannot be exprested, as General of the Army, sitting upon a dreadful horse, advanced, and some other vain Apparitions, the forerunners of great mischiefs, till night drawing on, whatsoever they saw vanished away. Which Wonders every body thought did foretell ruine, destruction, and misery to follow after, which the fates had necessitated; and so it came to passe. Alexander lib. 5. cap. 15.

19.

AS Sigehertus reports in his Chronicle, Antiochus by a Divine hand of Judgment was overturned and cast down in the second year of Mauritius; A certain Citizen of the place, a man of singular piety, and full of charity, and liberall in his Alms, saw an old man all in white, with two more with him, standing in the midst of the City with a handkerchief in his hand, with which striking the middle part of the City, it suddenly was overturned; houses, men and all. And his two companions had much ado to perswade him to spare the rest of the City that stood; so when he had used many comfortable speeches to this good man, they appeared no more.

20.

IN the year of our Lord, 1536. a certain Factor of Sicilia journeying from Catana to Messana upon the 21 day of March took up his lodging at Taurorminium; thence next morning travelling on his way not far from the Town, he met 10 Pargettors, as they seemed to be carrying with them their tools, he asking whither they were bound? They answered, To Etna, (commonly called, the Mountain Gibellus). And soon after ten more of them, who being asked whither they all went? returned the same answer, That their Master workman had sent them to build a certain Edifice at Etna; and being asked, who their Master was? they said, He came a little after them. And suddenly he met a man exceedingly taller then any ordinary man, with a very long beard and hair, and blacker then any Crow, so that he might seem to be Vulcan himself, had he been lame; He without any more complement, askt the Factor, Whether he met his Workmen? He answered, That indeed he saw certain Men, who said they were going to build at Etna; but whether they were his Workmen or no, he knew nor; but if they were, he would be he glad to know what moved him to undertake so strange a piece of Work, as to build in a Mountain so high, and so deep in Snow, that it is hard for the ablest Traveller to passe there. Then said this unknown Archite&, Although you little credit my words, you shall shortly know, and your eyes shall bear you witness, that I am able to perform this and much more, if I please. And with these words he vanished out of his sight. At this the man became so terrified, that he had like to have dyed in the place; but with much ado he got back to the Town full of horror, and according to the custome procured a Priest, was confest, declared his vision, and the same evening departed this life. The beginning of the night following, the 23. of March, there was a great Earthquake, and exceeding great flames of fire burst out of the top of the Mountain Stna on the East side, and were violently carried toward the Sun-rising, insomuch, that the Clergy and people of Catana were so struck with terrour, that they all ran to the Church of St. Agatha, to implore divine assistance, from whence the voyce of their prayers, and excessive weeping, with their dolefull duties, and unanimous cry for mercy, the bells all the while ringing mournfully, came to the Church dedicated to the Purification of the Blessed Virgin. And (O wonderful event!) before their prayers were ended, the fire began to decrease, and in a short time became utterly extinct. Gilbert. Cognat. libro octavo narrationum.

D Amasius Syrus Simplicius, and some other learned men came out of Sicilie together, and went into Persia to see King Cosroes, of whose fame and vertue they had heard great report. In their coming home, as they returned, they found the body of a man in the field unburied. They abhorring the inhumanity of the Persians buried it. In the night time the shape or Ghost of an old, honourable person seem'd to haunt one of the retinue, saying, Do not interre this unburied corps, let the Dogs tear it in pieces. The Earth is the Mother of us all, it admits not of that man, who depraves his Mother. When he was awake, he told his vision to the rest; Wherefore going back again in the morning into the field, they saw the naked corps lay in the open field. Agathius lib. 2. seems to speak of it, among his Greek Epigrams,

Μη οδύης, ἢ ἀδανδρῶν, ἐν ἀνὸς ἀνέμα, γούδω

Τὴν γούδων πύλιν, μυσθιόδοτος ἢ ἄλλος ἀδύα.

Let this unburied Corps no buriall have,

Our Mother Earth to Mother wrongers lends no grave.

E Dward the third King of England, when on a time the Collectors of the Tribute-money which was impos'd on the people, had brought before him a huge heap of money given out of that tribute, to make him merry, he suddenly thought he saw the Devill sporting and playing about the money, and therefore, abhorring money of this nature, as a detestable thing, they say he presently commanded it to be taken out of his sight, and to be restored to the people. Polydore Lib. 8.

23. Vhen Thyanus, a City of Asia, (which had rebelled) was taken, Aurelianus the Emperour being in his Pavilion all alone, very angry, thinking how to destroy it, he saw with great terror Apollonius Thyaneus the Philosopher appearing to him, which was dead long since, and advising him; Aurelianus, if thou desirest to be a Conquerour, think not to slay my Citizen. Aurelianus, if thou wilt be a Ruler, shed no innocent blood. Aurelianus, be mild, and gentle, if thou wilt be a Ruler. Caesar lib. 17. cap. 13. ex Fl. Vopisco.

24. St. Martin the Bishop of Tours in France, was greatly tempted by the Devil. On a time the Devil appeared to him all in purple, and with a Diadem in the person of Christ. Martin seeing this, was amaz'd; the Devil saith unto him; Know Martin, whom thou adorest; I am Christ, I am going to the Earth, I would first make my self known to thee. Here when Martin replied not, he saith again, Martin, why dost thou doubt to believe in me, seeing thou seest me? I am Christ. Then he being taught in Gods Word by the Holy Ghost, saith; My Christ was crucified and wounded, but I see you in no such habit, neither put I my belief in you. At this word he vanished. Marculus ex Severo Sulpitio.

25. VE read in the Life of S. German, a Bishop, that on a night when the cloth was laid in an Inn after Supper, he much wondering at it, was inquisitive, for whom that Supper was provided; and answer was made, For good Men and women which fraggle up and down in the night. Whereupon the holy man intended to watch them. And lo, a great company of men and women came to the Table, whom he charging not to go away, the whole household lookt if they knew any of them. They saying they were all neighbours, every bodys house being searcht, he found them all in their beds. Whereupon he presently put them all to their oaths, who acknowledged, that they were evil spirits, or Devils.

26. Menippus, the Scholer of the Philosopher Demetrius, a very handsome young man, when he went to Cenchras by Corinth, he met the shape of a strange Maid, beautifull and rich, which said, that she was in love with him; Thereupon she invited him to go to her house: He being love-smitten, oftentimes kept her company there, and did think to marry her. She had a house furnished like a Princess. Apollonius Thyaneus considering all things in that house, cry'd out, that she was one of the Fairies, whom some call Huggers, others walking Ghosts. Philostatus in vita Apollonii.

Jamblicus that famous Magician, when a certain Egyptian whilst he was making his challenge, had an apparition to the great rout of all the standers by; bad them be of good cheer, and not wonder at it, for he knew it to be the Ghost of a certain Fencer, who was then lately slain in a single Combat. Senaplus in Aethiopia.

27.

When Constantine the Great, made Gallus Governour of the East; Julianus being in great hope of compassing the Empire himself, sought throughout all Greece for Southlayers and Wizards, and consulted all he could meet with, about the success of his designs. At last he met with one who promised him great satisfaction in the foretelling of what future events he should propose. And having led him into a room beset with Images, the Magician began to call upon his Devils, and they presently appeared, but (as they are wont) in an ugly black hue and shape; in so much that Julianus, being foreafraid, signed his forehead with the sign of the Crosse, whereat the Devils suddenly vanished, as minded of the victory of our Lord Jesus, and their utter rout and ruine thereby. Then the Conjuror reproved Julianus for being so timorous: But Julianus, highly admiring the power and verue of the Crosse, cleared his mind of the conceit of running after wizards, by this consideration; That the Devils would never have fled at the sign of the Crosse, did they not perfectly hate that action. Theodoretus, lib. 3. c. 3. Sozomenus, lib. 5. cap. 3.

28.

A Certain Mediolanensian Boor, as he returned homewards from his labour, about three hours within night, saw a Goblin or Spirit follow him, and when he endeavoured to out-run it, make he what use he could of his heels, the Spectral fetch't him up, and at last threw him to the ground, when he endeavoured to cry out, but could not. At length when he had lain long on the Earth, all roll'd in mud and dirt, he was found by some who passed by that way, and carried home half dead, and at the end of eight dayes gave up the Ghost. Cardanus de Subilitate.

29.

A Certain Lacedemonian having brought the Philosopher Plato out of Sicily, sold him off to Agina, by the command of the Tyrant Dionysius. But in regard it was a capital crime for an Athenian to come to Agina, he was called in question for his life by one Comandrus: but the necessity of the matter being taken into consideration, he was sold away for twenty pounds to one Aniceris of Cyrenia, and by him afterwards made free. Afterwards the City was taken by Cabria, and this Comandrus drowned in the Hellespont, who was told, before his death, by an apparition that this hard fortune befel him, for the hard measure the Philosopher had received. Laertius, lib. 3.

30.

31.

Symeon in the 28th chap. of his 6th Book, tells us that one Apelles, a Monk, about Ashmun in some of the Monasteries of Egypt, did many strange things, and whilst upon a certain time he was busie at some Smithy-work he had in hand, there appeared to him a most beautiful and adorned lady tempting him to lust, whereat he snatcht a hot Iron from the fire, and ran it into the face of the lustfull Succubus, who vanished with a hideous cry at the hurt he had given her.

32.

Damasius Bishop of Mediolana, when for the profession of his Faith he was put from his place, as he went towards Constantinople, he put in at Corinth, and there for want of better accommodation he was forc'd to take up with lodgings haunted with evil spirits, and at midnight when the Devils began to bray, bleat, howl, and roar about the house like Lions, and other beasts, the Good Bishop rose, and thus expostulated with those fiends; or their head Most wicked Pluto, thou who saidst, I will establish my seat in the North and will become like unto the most High, behold for thy pride thou art become like unto Swine and Asses, because thou deniedst obedience to thy Maker. The Devils at his speech were so confounded, they left haunting that house for the future. Gregor. Turonensis lib. 3. Dialog. cap. 4.

33.

Phlegon Trallianus a Manumisse of the Emperour Adrian, in his Book de Mirabilibus et Longevis (i. e.) of Wonders and Antiquities, relates a History, which if you will take his private authority, he avers he was well-acquainted with it, being in a certain City where he was: The Story is this, Philinnium the daughter of Damofrates the Inn-keeper and Charius, fell in Love with one Machates, one of her Fathers lodgers, which her Parents very much misliking, she broak her heart with grief, and was buried with publick solemnity. Six Months after, when Machates was come thither again, Philinnium came to him and lay with him, received a gilded Cup, and an Iron Ring which he gave her, and likewise bestowed a Gold Ring, and a Breast-cloth upon Machates, and so departed. The Nurse saw the Spectral and declared the businesse to her Parents, who the next day came and found their daughter with their Guest, whom they embraced with most passionate acclamations, whilst she spake to them in this manner. O Father and Mother, how unjustly do you envy me the happiness of being two or three dayes in your house with this your Guest, without doing any evill at all; ah you will again bewail your curiosity in your choice for me, when I am gone from him to my appointed station; for alas, I am here but by permission, and the special licence of the Gods. When she had thus entered her mind, she was instantly a dead corps again, and when they had carried her publickly to be seen, they declared the whole story to all that came flocking into the Theater. The grave was found open and nothing therein, but the the Iron Ring, and the gilded Cup. The Corps by the advice of Hilw the South-sayer, was buried beyond the lines of the City. Mathias through grief, became the actor of his own Tragedy.

Hieronymus in his lives of the Fathers, tells of a certain Monk, who was enticed to most foul and lustfull embraces by a De-vill in the shape of a most amiable Woman, who, when to propagate their lusty she bended forward her members towards him; seemed like a Mare or Mule, or some brut creature. And when he endeavoured to accomplish carnall copulation, she making an ugly howling noise, like a spirit as she was, and a Phantasm, van-ish'd from between his hands as he embraced her, and left him (wretched man!) miserably deluded. Item 2. c. 46. De Pre- stigia Damum.

34.

It is storied by Vintennus in the third Book of his Histories, that there was in Sicily under the King Rogerius, a young man of good courage, and very skillfull in swimming, who about twilight in a Moon-shine evening was washing himself in the Sea, and a woman swimming after him caught him by the hair, as if it had been some of his fellows that intended to drown him. He spake to her, but could not get a word from her; wherupon he took her under his cloak, and brought her home, and afterward married her. On a time one of his fellows upbraiding him, told him he had hugg'd a phantasm; he being horribly affrighted, drew his sword, and threatned his Wife, that he would murder his son which he had by her, if she would not speak, and make her originall known. Alas poor wretch, saith she, thou knowest a commodious wife, in forcing me to speak; I should have continued with thee, and should have been beneficiall to thee, if thou hadst let me alone with my commanded silence. But now thou shalt never see me more. And immediately she vanish'd. But she Child grew up, and much frequented the Sea. In fine, on a certain day, this phantasm meeting him in those waters, carried him away in the presence of many people.

35.

IN a Country called Maria, there was a very gallant and handsome young Lady, that had refused many in marriage, and most wickedly kept company with an evil spirit, by the Greeks termed Cacodemon, who being with child by him, and by her Parents severity constrained to tell the father of it; answered, that she knew not where she was, that a very fair young man did oftentimes meet her by night, and sometimes by day. Her parents, though giving small credence to their daughter, yet earnestly desiring to know the truth, who it was that had perswaded and enticed their daughter to this lewdness, within three dayes after, the damosel having given them notice thereof, that he which ravish'd her, was with her; having therefore unlock'd the doors, and set up a great light, coming into the Chamber, they saw an ugly foul Monster, of such a fear-full

36.

full hue, as no man can believe, in their daughters arms. Very many that were sent for, came in all haste to this uncanny object; Among whom, a Priest of an approved life, and well disciplin'd, all the rest being scared away, and amaz'd, when repeating the beginning of St. John's Gospel, he came to that place, The word was made flesh, the evil Genius with an horrible outcry goes away, carrying the roof of the house away with him, and set all the furniture on fire. The woman being preserved from peril, was 3. dayes after brought to bed of a most deformed Monster, such as no man (as they say) ever saw; which the Midwives, to prevent the infamy and disgrace of that family, heaping up a great pile of wood, did instantly burn to ashes. Herbar Boethus libr. 8. hist. Scotorum.

37.

The same Boethus relates another story in the same place. In the year of our Lord God, 1536. as they were sailing from an arm of the Sea, called Phortea, to traffique into Flanders, there arose such a violent wind, that the sayls, masts, tacklings, and all were broken, and the ship also was toss'd up and down the swelling waves, that every body concluded, they must certainly perish. The master of the ship admiring at that season so huge and unaccustomed churlishness of the Heavens, (for it was about the Summer-Solstise) when with loud cryes they did not attribute it to the Stars, but to the wiles of some evil Devils, they heard a voyce from the lower part of the ship, of a woman miserably complaining of her self, that some hee-Devil in the form of a man, with whom she had many years accompanied with, was at that time with her, and forc'd her, she would therefore yield her to the mercy of the Sea, that, if she perished, who was the cause of so great and imminent danger; all the rest by the goodnesse of God might escape safe. A Priest coming to the woman bewailing her self, to counsel her for her own salvation, and them that were with her, did piously exhort her, now openly confessing and acknowledging her fault, earnestly detesting that abominable wickednesse, and repenting the fact from the bottom of her heart, with sighs expressing the same, that nothing should be wanting on her part, and he knew God would be propitious to her, &c. In the midst of the Priests exhortation, when the perplexed woman with many sighs and groans was deploring that heinous crime she had committed, all that were by, saw a black Cloud come forth out from the pump of the Ship, and with a great noise, fire, smook, and ill savour descended into the Sea. Then was it fair weather, and the Sea calm, and the Merchants went to their desired haven with their Ship, and nothing lost.

38.

Franciscus Mirandula makes mention in his writings, that he knew one Berna call'd Benedictus, a Priest, 75. years old, who had lain above 40. years with a familiar spirit for his Bed-fellow, in the shape of a woman; it came into the market with him, he conversed with it, insomuch that all the standers by, seeing nothing took him for a Fool. He call'd her Hermelina, as if she were a woman, man. I knew also, saith he, another, whose name was Pinnetus, who was above 80 years old, he did use the sports of Venus more then 40 years, with another spirit, which appear'd like a woman, and call'd her name Florina. Strabo's historian Cardanus recitat. lib. 15. cap. 80. de varietate rerum.

Jacobus Ruffus writes in the fifth Book, the sixth Chapter of the conception of men, that in our time Margareta, a Citizens Maid servant was ravished by a foul spirit, and then took her leave on her repenting, by the order of the Ministers of the Church; after which she felt such cruel torments and pangs in her belly, that she thought every hour almost that she should be deliver'd of a child; then came forth out of her womb iron nails, wood, pieces of glasse, hair, wooll, stones, bones, iron, and many such like.

39.

A Certain Merchants Wife about 6 or 7. miles from Wittenberg, in the way to Silesia, when her husband was away, by reason of his merchandizing abroad, was wont to entertain one Concubine or another. It so fell out, that tier husband going forth, one of her Paramours came in the night time, and when he had made himself spruce, and satisfied his lust, as it seem'd in the morning like a Magpie sitting on the buttrey, he bade his Concubine farewell, in these words, This was your Lover: and before he had done speaking, he vanished out of sight, and never came more.

40.

Benedictus the 8th, by his Country a Thuscane, by the Magick of Theophylas his Nephew, who had been the Scholer of Sylvester the second, long since Pope, came to be Pope; He was head of the Church 11. years. After his death, he appear'd to a Bishop which he in his life-time commonly made use of, sitting upon a black horse, much lamenting and complaining of the torments of the damned, and charging me to warn his Brother John the 11th, to bestow that gold on the poor, which he had formerly buried under ground; whereby he was in hopes to be freed.

41.

Theophylas, Nephew by his Brother Aldericus of the two Popes, Benedict and John, came to that dignity, by his Magick, wherein he was alway accounted famous. He call'd himself Benedict the 9th. He continued so by times ten years. He was at last strangled in a Wood by one of those spirits, with whose familiar he was wont to converse. Benno. Historians report, among whom are Martinus Polonus, and Petrus Damianus, that Benedict was by a Hermit seen near the Mill, of a terrible shape; for in his body he was like a Bear, in his head and tayl like an Asse: And when he was asked, How he came to be so metamorphos'd? 'tis reported he made this answer, I wander up and down in this shape now, because when I was Pope, I lived as void of reason and conscience, without law, and without God, and have defiled the chair of Rome with all manner of vilenesse.

42.

43.

ST. Martin, Bishop of Tours in France, when hard by his Monastery an unknown Martyr's bones were by the vulgar superstitiously worshipped, that he might not by his authority corroborate their superstition, took one day with him some of his brethren, and to the place he goes, where calling upon God, he supplicates him, to manifest and clear the truth thereof unto him. On his left hand stands an ugly ghost, he makes his name known, and confesses the truth of the crime, saying, That he was a common thief, and was put to death for his villanies, and by the common peoples ignorance was honour'd for a Martyr. Then Martin makes an Edict, That the Altar should out of hand be taken away, and by this means delivered the people from their superstition. Severus Sulpitius in ejus vita.

44.

When Simonides was supped at Scopas his house in Thebes, and had sung that song which he had made on him, wherein many things for ornament sake, (as the Poets use to do) were written on Castor and Pollux; Scopas told him, he would give him half according to their agreement for that song, but the other half he must demand of Castor and Pollux, whom he had equally commended with him. A little while after comes in a Messenger to Simonides, and tells him, there were two Men at the gate calling for him very earnestly. Up he arose, and went forth, but saw no body. In this very interim of time, down falls that very room where Scopas was feasting, and crush't to death him and all his company. Cicero in lib. de Oratore.

45.

IN the year of our Lord, 1654. In the eleventh year of the reign of Constant, it rained ashes, so that Constantinople was in great fear, fire fell from Heaven, and a most grievous plague mightily increas'd for the 3 hot months. A good and bad Angel were seen by every body to go in the night time about the City, and as often as by the good Angels command, the bad Angel did smite any ones door, with a javelin which he had in his hand, so many dyed out of that house the next day. Sigebertus in Chronicis, et Paulus Diaconus, lib. 19. rerum Romanorum.

46.

IN the sixth year of Constantinus Copronymus, in the month of January, about 4 of the clock there was an earthquake round about Palestine, and all Syria, which destroyed many Churches and Monasteries. And a Plague beginning in Sicily and Calabria, goes quite through Arabia and Hellades, and through the neighbouring Isles, and at last it comes to Constantinople. Many perplex't in mind thought they saw some strange men of a stern look following them, and speaking unto them, and to enter their houses, and either to wound them there, or cast them forth out of doors; and so it was indeed in the event. For that infection made houses which were full empty, and there was such a multitude that died, that all the Sepulchres in the City and Suburbs being fill'd, Vaults, Lakes, Vine-

Vineyards and Gardens were made places to bury in. Anno Dom. 748. juxta Sigebertum.

IT was a strange, and almost prodigious kind of death that Theoderic King of the Ostrogoths died: For in a while after that he had slain Symmachus and Boethius, when a great fish's head was set before him on the table at supper, he imagined he saw Symmachus his head in it, biting his nether lip in, as if he threatened him, as he himself afterwards told his Physician Elpidius: With which representation he was so affrighted, that at that time going to bed, he was alway saying as long as he lived, That image amazed him.

47.

THe Castrobians report that Aristem Proconnesius, the Poet, going into a Fullers shop in the Isle called Marmora, died there, and the Fuller shutting up his shop, went away to acquaint his neighbours, that such an one was dead: this rumour being spread quite through the City, that Aristem was dead; suddenly there came one whose name was Cyzicenus, a Philosopher of Athens, from the City Artace, who said, that he was in Company with Aristem at a place called Cyzicum, and spake with him. Whilst he endeavoured to confirm it, all the neighbours were in a readinesse, having all things convenient to carry men forth. The house being open'd, Aristem appeared, neither living, nor yet quite dead, and 7 years after he was seen in Proconnesus, when he composed those Verses which at this time are called by the Greeks Arimaspei: which when they were made, he again vanished. The inhabitants of Metapontis in Italy, say that Aristem was seen in those quarters 300, and 40. years after, and charged that Apolloes Altar should be erected, and called by the name of Aristeus Proconnesius, &c. Herodotus lib. 4.

48.

ONe Leonard at Basill about the year of Christ, 1520. one of no ingenuity, and who stammer'd in his speech, he was commonly called Lienimannus. He, I know not by what skill entering that vault which opens to the City Basill, and going further then ever any yet could, tells of strange and wonderfull sights. One going down into the Cave with a lighted Taper in his hand, said that he must first passe by an Iron gate, then out of one Vault into another, and then into fair and flourishing Gardens. In the middle was a Hall to be seen most richly beautified, and a very handsome Virgin to the middle, with a Golden Diadem round about her head, downwards she was like an ugly Serpent, she would lead me by the hand to the Iron chest. Upon that lay two black Mastiffe Dogs, who with their horrible barking scar'd away all that came near them. But the maid restrained them. Then untying the bundle of keyes about her, she opened the chest, and took out all kind of moneys, Gold, Silver, and Brasse, whereof by the Virgins bounty he said he brought much out of the Vault with him. He said moreover, that the Virgin used to say, that she was by direfull imprecations long since devoted hither, and transformed into such a Monster; but she was sprung from a royall stem, and thought there was no other way to recover her safety, then if she received 3. kisses from a pure and undefiled young man. For then her own form would return to her, and she would give her whole treasure, other wife called her Dower, which was hid in that place, to him, that freed her. He averred also, that he kissed twice, and twice took notice of her deportment, so terrible for over-much joy of her hoped-for liberty, that he was afraid, that she would tear him in pieces alive. In this interval of time it so fell out that his Nephews bringing him to a bawdy-house, he accompanied with an Harlot. With which foul crime being contaminated, he could never after find the way to the vault, nor enter it. Whereof, poor Soul, he often with weeping tears made complaint. Who sees not that this was a Diabolical phantasm; but yet verily that ancient Roman coin, which he brought out of the Cave, and made sale of, to many of our City, do plainly shew, that some treasure was hid in that hollow place, which some covetous Devill hath in custody, just as the evill spirits, to their own great perill, do in Golden mines. Lest any should think these things fabulous, there are some witnesses yet alive, that heard Lieninanus make relation of all things. After him a Citizen of Basil, in a very great dearth and scarcity, that he might the better cherish his Family, went down into the same cave, hoping to find some Money. But he going on a little way, and finding nothing but Mens bones there, in great amazement instantly came back again, quite frustrated of his hope. Teste Johanne Stumpfio, in Chron. Helvetia.

49.

50.

V Incentius reports this out of Helinandus, lib. 3. cap. 27. that, In the Diocesse of Colony there is a famous and great Palace, which looks over into the River Rhene, 'tis called Juvamen, where many Princes in former times being met, suddenly there came to them a small Bark, which being fastned to her neck, a Swan kall'd along with a silver chain. From thence a young Souldier nor known to any of them skip't forth, and the Swan brought home the ship. Afterwards this Souldier married, and had children. At last returning in the same Palace, and beholding the Swan coming with the same Bark and chain, he presently went into the Ship, and was never seen more, but his children abide there till this very day. From him in the Castle Clivens. (where you may see also a very high and ancient Tower, named Cyren, on the top whereof the picture of a Swan is whurled to and fro) most bravely wrought, do they derive the ancient pedigree of the Clivens. Dukes. Vicarius lib. 2. cap. 46. de praesigis Demon.

51.

V When the Persians (Megara being invaded) betook themselves to the City Thebes to Mardonius their General, by Diana's pleasure 'twas dark on a sudden, they mistaking their way, went went on the hilly side of the Country. There, by the delusions of Spirits, were arrows shooting darts; at the strokes of them the next rocks did as 'twere groan again, they thinking they were men, that groaned by reason of their wounds and hurts, never gave over shooting, till they had spent all their arrows. And when 'twas day, those of Megara being well-armed, fell upon them that had no weapons very violently, and slew a great number of their army. And for this successfull event they erected an Image to Diana their Protectress. Pausanias in Attica.

IN the Battel of Marathon against the Persians, a certain rude and rustick fellow, both by shape and habit, help'd the Athenians, who when with his plough he had killed very many of those barbarous people, on a sudden he vanished away. And when the Athenians made enquiry, who he was, the Oracle made this answer only, Honour noble Ethelaus. In that very place they set up a trophy made of white stone. Pausanias in Attica. In the same fight Theseus his Ghost was seen by many to invade the Medes. After that, the Athenians adored him as a God. Plutarchus, in ejus vita.

WHEN the Persians under the command of Xerxes, went to Minerues Chappel, which is before Apolloes Temple, at the same time lightning fell down from Heaven upon them, and two stones at the top of Parnassus, making an huge noise, fell down, and prevented many of them. Whereupon they which were in Minerues Chappel gave a great shout, rejoycing much. The Barbarians fled, those of Beotia made known their ruine. And they which remained fled straightway to Beotia reporting that they saw two huge armed men following after them. The people of Beotia told them they were two nobles Heroes of their own Country, Phylacus and Autonous, whose Temples are to be seen. That which was Phylacus his Temple, was the same way beyond Minerues, but the Temple of Autonous was hard by Castalia under the top Hymettus. The stones which fell down from Parnassus were in Herodotus his time whole sit in Minerues Temple porch, to which the Barbarians brought them. Herodotus lib. 2.

WHILST the Greeks were fighting against Xerxes at Salamin, 'tis rumour'd, that a great light shone from the City Eleusis, and that there was such a great noise in the fields of Thoria, as 'twere of a great many men, that they heard them even to the Sea-side, from this company which made the noise, was seen a cloud arising, a little above the Earth, and to go from that continent, and to fall upon the Ships. Others saw as 'twere armed men reaching forth their hands from Aegina to help the Graecian ships: they did suppose that they belonged to Alexides, whom before the battel they had humbly implored. Plutarchus, in Themistocle.

55. When the Arcadians in a hostile manner came on the coasts of the City Elis, and the Inhabitants thereof had set themselves in battle array against them, 'tis reported that a woman which gave suck to a man-child came to the chief officers of the Eleans and that she said when she told them 'twas her child, that she was warn'd in a dream that he should be put to the Eleans as a Souldier to fight on their side, the Generals took order that the naked Infant should be rank'd before the Colours, because they were of opinion that the woman was to be credited. The Arcadians making the first onset, the child in the open view of them all was metamorphos'd into a Snake: the Enemies being affrighted with this strange and prodigious sight, presently ran away. This notable victory being obtained, he was named Sosipolis from the City which was preserved; this Snake was seen to hide himself. The battell being over, they rais'd up a Temple, and dedicated it to its proper genius, Sosipolis. Honours were ordain'd for Lucina, because by her means this child was born into the World. Pausanias lib. 6.

56. When the people of Locris skirmish'd with the Crotoni, in the Locrian army were seen two young men on milk-white Horses; they were the foremost in the fight, who when they had conquer'd and subdued their enemies, never appeared more. The Victory in the same instant it was obtain'd, was publish'd at Athens, Lacedaemon and Corinth, though places far remote from Locris and Croton, three hundred thousand of the people of Syracuse were slain by a small number, and the city itself utterly destroyed. Fulgens lib. 1. cap. 6.

57. The Eretrians on a time going from their own City Euboea by ship, and invading the Country Takagrus, they say that Mercurius led forth some young striplings, and himself also, who was but a youth, armed only in a wrestlers habit, in comparison of the rest, forc'd the Euboeans to take their heels, and for this very cause they erected a Temple to Asclepius Promachus. Pausanias in Beotia.

58. In the fight which the Romans had against Tarquinius, going to Rome, as the report goes, that Castor and Pollux were seen in the battell, and immediately after the fight was done, the horses being very hot, and trickling down with sweat, messengers also of the victory were seen in the Market place, where in stead of their well, they have a House. From whence they consecrated a day to Castor and Pollux in the Ides of July. In the Roman war, Castor and Pollux were seen to wipe off the sweat of their hocks at the lake Juturna, when their hocks, which was near the fountain was wide open. Valerius Maximus lib. 1. cap. 6. When A. Posthumius the Dictator, and Manilius Obolus General of the Thusculan forces, did with all might at the lake called Regillus encounter one with another, and neither for for a long time was worsted, Castor and Pollux, Champions for the Romane party appearing, utterly routed all their men of War. Idem. lib. 1. cap. 8.

V V Hen the Bruttii and Lucani with inveterate hatred, and main strength, endeavoured to destroy the City Therina, and Fabritius Lucinus, Cos. chiefly by his care, would preserve it safe, but the event was doubtfull, both armies being met in one place, the Romans not daring to enter the fight, a young man of good stature at first began to exhort them to take courage, then finding them faint-hearted, and very backward, up he takes the ladder, and away he went to the enemies tents, through the midst of their army, and scales their bulwark. Then crying out with a loud voice that he had made the first step to the victory, and thus he enticed and drew on the Romans to take the Enemies Garrison, and the Lucani and Bruttii to defend their own, thus they stood doubtfull to encounter. But he again by the instigation of his harness, delivered up to the Romans their prostrate enemies to be slain and taken. For twenty thousand were killed, five thousand with Statius Statilius General of their Country, were taken, with three and twenty Colours. The day after when Cos. had told him that he reserved a garland amongst the renowned, for him, of whose industry he had made use by whom their quarters were suppressed, and he could not be found that could ask such a reward. 'Tis likewise known and believed, that Mars was propitious to the Romans. Among other things of this nature, these are manifest and clear tokens, his head-pierce pointed with two spires, wherewith his heavenly pate was covered, was also one Argument. Therefore by the command of Fabritius, supplication was made to Mars, and testimonial given that his helping hand was forgotten by all the Souldiers, crown'd with lawrells with great jollity. Valerius lib. x. cap. 8.

59.

E Empusa or Onocale, an evil ghost, sent by Hecate to them that are in distresse, because she can transform her self into divers shapes, thence called so, because it goes with one foot, the other is made of brasse, or is an Asses foot. Some thought it appeared at noon, when sacrifices were offered to the dead. Aristophanes, in Ranae. Dialog. But, I see a great beast; What manner of one? An ugly one, and of many shapes. For now 'tis an Oxe, now a Mule, another while a very handsome woman. Where is it? I'll go near to it. But now 'tis no woman, 'tis now a dog; then 'tis Empusa, all his face is as 'twere on fire, and he hath a foot of Brasse. Suidas.

60.

I N that Lybia which enloseth the Syrtis, sometimes and most of all in a calm season, do appear shapes of severall living creatures in the Ayre, some of which are still, some stir; and these sometimes flie from one, sometimes follow after one, but all of a large stature, they terrifie and affright the ignorant. But they that follow after, environ him they catch, laying cold paws upon him: Diadorus lib. 3. cap. 4.

61.

low

62. THe Orthomessi commonly report of Atheon, that there is a field haunted by that Ghost, which rested on that stone; (which is between the Plataeans and Megarans). Wherefore consulting Apolloes Oracle, they were charged to bury the reliques or remainders, if they found any, and moreover that they should fasten that representation of a Goblin, which was made of Brasse, unto a stone. Pausanias in Boeotia.

63. IN Parnassus a hill of Beotia dedicated to Apollo, Bacchus his feasts are every other year solemnized, and there do meet and are to be seen a numerous company of Saryrs, which may be heard for the most part to speak in their own language; there is Musick likewise to be heard. Macrobius lib. 1. Saturnal. cap. 18.

64. They say, Gellus had a maid that died young, and 'tis generally believed her ghost walks to and fro at Lesbos, haunting children; whereupon they impute to this Gellus the death of any children, that die in their minority. Hence comes the Proverb, Puerorum amans Gello. Erasmus in Adagiis.

65. Strabo* in the sixth book of his Geography relates it. That Temessa was the chiefeft City of Bruttia from Liaus, called from him after ward Templa, which being built by the Aufonians, the Stoliens Thous his companions did then enjoy, and when they were expelled thence, the Bruttii: at last Hannibal and the Romans utterly destroyed it. Nere it, was a chappel beset with Olive trees dedicated to one Polites, Ulysses his associate. This man, because he was affronted by the Barbarians, was very usefull against them; so that it was turned into a Proverb, and they would usually say, Take heed Temessaus his Ghost is a coming. Then when the Locri and Epizephyrii possessed it, there was one Euthymus, as saith Ælian, that came thither out of Italy, a famous champion, and mighty strong, who also carried about with him a stone of an huge magnitude, which he used to shew the Locri. He encountered with Polites, and return'd from the duel victor, and so his neighbours by his means were freed from paying tribute Money, which he was wont to force from them. He also made him to return with interest, whatsoever he had taken away from them. And from hence he thinks arose this Proverb To them that make wicked and unlawfull gain, that Temessaus his genius would come to them; whereby they signified, that some time or other they must with usury pay back again those things which they had wrongfully, and by fraud or force, taken from them. Pausanias in Eliaca, tells the story somewhat otherwise, to wit, that a comrade of Ulysses, was for ravishing a Virgin kill'd, and for that very fact his Goblins, (unlesse they were yearly appeased by offering a Virgin) used to be very fierce and angry, and they spared no Sex, nor

Age. And him indeed the common people do believe to be the gins of that place which Enthymus (that noble Champion) returning from Tenessa suppress, by setting at liberty, and marrying that Virgin, which they had promised. Erasmus in Chilonibus.

T Here is an Isle of Egea, from whence the Egean Sea took its name, consecrated to Neptune, wherein scarce any one could take any rest. Nicostater told this as phantasmatum Dei decafa- culis, but now and then they are disturbed and cannot sleep. Celsus
lib. 30. cap. 9. A. L.

66.

Before that C. Cesar Caligula his body was interred, the Gardens were haunted and disquieted with spirits. And they said in that house where he died they were every night affrighted untill the house was burnt to the ground. Suetonius.

67.

Nero murdered his Mother Agrippina, finding out, and severely chastening him for what he had said and done. But he was alwayes after troubled in Conscience for that wicked act, although the Souldiers, Senate, and people encouraged him in it, and gave him many thanks for so doing: he often confessed that he was haunted with his Mother's ghost, and beaten with furies. The Magicians preparing a sacrifice, he attempted to call upon and in-treat the Gods. In the pilgrimage to Greece he did not dare to appear at the solemnities of the Eleusiniens, because at the beginning of them, the wicked and prophane were summoned by the call of the Cryen. Suetonius.

68.

O The Emperor (when Galla was slain) beginning his reign with tortures and servours, the first night was so troublesome and grievous to him, that not sleeping, on a sudden being horribly affrighted, he groaned heavily, and was found by them which went to his chamber, lying on the floor. Whereupon he endeavoured to pacifie and assuage Galla his ghost, by whom he thought he was troubled and disturbed. The next day desiring what to do a great tempest arose, he falling down ever and anon, murther'd and tumbled. Suetonius.

69.

Zonaras related out of Thanasius, Isidore Commens the Emper courting about Napoli saw a wild boar of a fearful aspect, which (loosening his horses reins) he follow'd as fast as he could, plunging into the Sea in vanishing, some judged it not to be a Boar, but some Diabolical spirit. In this interim, a sudden brightnes like Lightning, so danted the Emperor, that striking his horse for fear, and foaming at the mouth, he was laid all along on the ground in an amaze, and from thence was carried in a small boat into the Kings Palace: he afterwards betook himself to a Monastery. Zonaras.

70.

71.

It is reported by Augustinus, that the Tribune Hesperius, had a plot of ground in the territory Fusalefis, which was sorely haunted by evill spirits, so that the servants and brute beasts were grievously tormented: being therefore necessitated by this Domestick misery, he went to the Elders of the Church, and requested that some of them would vouchsafe to read prayers there. One of them went his way thither, and prayed fervently, and zealously, he also administred the Lords Supper there, and immediately that vexatious crew of hobgoblins gave over coming. Libro de civitate Dei vigesimo, 2, capite 8:

72.

Severus Salustius writes in the life of Martin his first book, and likewise in Clement his life, That a certain Monk an hermit, whose father lived hard by him, who not loving his son carryed a hatchet with him, wherewith he cut down trees, to carry home as he returned: Upon which the Devill in the shape of an Angel appeared to this Monk, then in the form of his Father he was coming to him, with a hatchet to kill him, telling him, and averring he came to that end and purpose, an Hermit advising him to prevent his intent and resolution, and rather first to kill him, then be killed by him. Thinking therefore his father coming towards him, and saluting him, to be the Devill, presently killed him, and on the other side, the Devill instantly throttles the Monk.

73.

Under the Emperour Ludovicus the 3d, the City Mogantia was miserably haunted with a demoniall spirit. There is in Germany, and in the third part of Gallia, a little from the town Bingum, where the River Neves and Albene meet, a country town commonly called by the name of Camentum, quasi caput montium, the highest mountain. There in the year 848, a stragling fugitive spirit did many strange miracles, and pleid many juggling tricks, so that he was a great vexation and trouble to the Inhabitants. First he was a deadly dangerous ghost, which none could see, throwing stones at men, and knocking at their doors. Anon in the shape of a most pestilent and wicked genius, lying lurking in corners, and Prophecying, discovering robberies, most infamously branding all manner of delicts, and stirring up strife and contention among them. By degrees he burnt down their barns, and small cottages: to one he was more vexatious, haunting him wheresoever he went, and at last set his house on fire: And that he might incense all the neighbourhood against this innocent man to put him to death, this abominable forger of lies brags d up and down, 'Twas for his impieties, that this place was so infamous and execrable. He was made to stand all night in the cold, for their night hobgoblin by force kept him from his house. He to satisfy his neighbours, carried a hot iron in his hand, and receiving no hurt thereby, he appeared himself guiltlesse, yet neverthelesse his corn being cock't up in the fields; This wicked and forlorn creature burnt down his dwelling dwelling house; And when he persisted daily more and more spitefull, the Townesmen bring the cause before their Governour, or Bishop. The Priests were to purifie and expiate their fields, and Town with holy and devout prayers, and holy water. This wicked and disturbed spirit at first was opposite and stubborn, wounding some with stones, but being enchanted with divine hymnes, and by prevalent prayers conjured, was at last hush't, and was never after seen. When these were gone, came another turbulent Ghost, and saith, While those bald Priests mumbled over and over, I know not what, I hid my self under one of their surplisses, and heard him by name to take notice of him, who the night before through my perswasion lay with his hosts daughter. When this relation was done, making a great howling, the Ghost departed from those quarters, and vanished up into the Ayre. Sigerbertus Chron. Hilsaug. Antoninus, A. centinus lib. 4.

IN the Northern parts, there were night-walkers, that used to encloase and strangely to disturb the field-keepers, looking to their charge, with prodigious and wonderfull sights of divers kinds, the inhabitants thereabouts call'd this nightly sports of Monsters. The Elves daunce: of whom this is their opinion, that their Souls, who were inclin'd to carnall pleasures and delights, being once parted from the body, rove up and down the world. Amongst the number of which they reckon them to be, which yet in this our age do apply themselves in mans shape to the services of men, taking pains by night, and looking to their horses and flocks; you may see the footsteps verily sometimes in the grasse in a dewy morning, but sometimes they are utterly consumed. Olaus Magnus libro 3. cap. 11. Septentrional. gentium.

74.

THere is a Castle in the coasts of Finlandia, under the same dominion of Swedia, 'tis called the New-Castle, because built with admirable and rare workmanship, insomuch, that 'tis doubted, whether by Nature or Art: For 'tis situated on a round mountain, having onely one ingresse, and another egress on the West. This by a great piece of Timber, fastned with great Iron chains, which by strong labour every day, by the help of some pulleys, by reason of the impetuous waters, is in the night time attracted by the keepers to one side of the river. By this castle runs an immense and vast River, of an unknown profundity, coming out from a white pool, which is caused by a piece of ground, of a black colour, especially in the more about this Tower, that hatch and engenders fishes all black, and yet of a good and savoury rellish. But at last passing by Viburgus it makes the Lake to be black. At this River strange sights are now and then to be seen, and when the governours of the Castle or any Souldiers are near death, there appears one in the night-time playing upon an Harp, in the midst of the waters, you may also hear him. Olaus lib. 20. cap. 19, & 20.

75.

76.

IN Ilandia an Island under the Arctic Pole, there is a Promontory, which like the hill Etna is continually burning, and there is thought to be the place either to punish and torture, or discharge all wretched Souls. For there the Visions of all, which suffer a violent death do appear, so manifest and apparent to any they meet of their own acquaintance, as if they were alive, they take them by their right hand, not knowing they are dead; neither do they apprehend themselves to be in an error, till their spirits vanish away. The inhabitants of the place do much prognosticate the destiny of their Rulers and Governours, and whatsoever is done in the farthest part of the World, by the revelations of these appearances. Idem lib. 2. cap. 2.

77.

U*Ladislaus* the first, King of the Polonians, besieged Nacul the strong Castle of the Pomerans. There in a Moon-shiny night, the watches often saw troops as 'twere of armed men, riding up out of their open camps, and rushing upon the camps of the Polonians. When they often did thus, the Polonians were angry, and seem'd to be disquieted, but dare not at all come forth into open battell. On a night when news were brought them that the enemies were come again, they came forth on a heap out of their camp all in a rage, and running to and fro assaulted them a great way to no purpose. They which were besieged tiring of the Polonian riot and having prepared a way for their excursion, suddenly brake out upon them, and threw wild fire among their works and Cottages, which were covered with straw and reed, which quickly dispersing it self in many places, and few remaining in the Castle to defend it, easily burnt their works with a great part of the Castle. They affirm that the night-Ghosts, representing an Army in a hostile manner, were they, which by Gods permission vexed and perplexed the Polonians. Being thus worked, the Polonians, because Winter was very sharp in those Regions, and now at hand, and their houses were lost and gone, without which they were not able to endure the violence and injury of the winter weather, by these affrights likewise, and sudden alterations they were made religious, but the Nacul went from thence, not being able to compass their design. Cronerus lib. 3. Hist. Polon.

78.

IN the Countrey named Cracoviensis, at a very spacious Lake, by reason of the disturbance of some evill spirits, neither fit for fishing, nor any other use of Man, being very hard frozen in the Winter, they say that in the year 1278. the neighbours and Priests came together, bringing with them their Colours, Crucifixes, and some other holy and consecrated things wherewith to force and expell them thence, that they might more freely and securely recreate themselves in fishing, but throwing in their Net, at the first draught, the fishermen being at strife one with another, they drew forth but three small fishes onely, the one of them an ill-shap'd terrible rible Monster with a Goats head, and eyes flaming like fire. At which all being in an amaze, and running away; That spirit fell plunged himself under the Ice, and running to and fro in the Lake, made a terrible noise and outcry, and breathing on some of the company, they were miserably ulcerated. Cronerus lib. 9.

Jason Pratensis in his 29th Chapter tells us a story of a disemper'd brain of a Priest, which was troubled with the disease called by some Incubus, or the Mare, and imagined he saw a Woman of his acquaintance coming to him, which laying upon him whether he would or no, did most grievously afflict and torment him.

79.

Alexander in his second book of his Merry dayes, writes of Alexander, that he had an intimate friend of an undoubted credit, that took upon him the care of his friends funeral, and as he was going from thence to Rome from whence he came, night drawing on, he turn'd into the next Inne in the road, and there being very weary, he went to bed. And being all alone, and not as yet settled to sleep, he said he saw on a sudden the similitude or likenesse of his friend which lately died, coming towards him very pale and lean, just like him in the month, as he last parted from him when he lay sick, whom looking wisely upon for very fear that he was in, he was not himself, he asked him who he was? But he answering nothing, pull'd off his clothes, and went (as it seems) into the same bed where he lay, and came close to him, as if he would hug him. The other almost half dead for fear, went to the bed side, and would not let him come nigh him, he seeing that he was rejected, looks upon him with a stern and ununsual aspect, and taking up his clothes, presently rose out of bed, and putting them on, and his shooes, went away, and was never seen again. This good man being thus affrighted was deadly sick, and even at death's dore. To that which hath been already spoken, he said likewise, that when he was struggling with him in bed, he felt his bare foot so cold, as no Ice could be colder.

80.

Gordian my friend, saith the same Alexander, a man of an approved trust, related to me, when with his comrade he went to the City Arezzo, in his journey, as it fell out, they wandred far out of the way, by reason of many turnings, and by places, so that they saw no plough'd or Arable ground, but onely Woods, Groves, and inaccessible places were in their sight, and solitude it self was enough to terrifie them, the Sun therefore approaching the Western circuit, being weary by their hard travell they sat down together, and within a while they thought they heard a mans tongue, which going after, on the next hill they espy'd three men of a huge wild and terrible form, not of the fashion of men, in black long Cloaks, in a sad and mourning habit, their beard and hair hanging down to the ground, who calling and making signes to them, had almost perswaded and enticed them to them, but in that interim greater then these appeared of an immense bulk and stature of body, far exceeding mans, and another also appeared of the same shape, stark naked, leaping and skipping up and down most strangely, with other unseemly deportments at which sight they being clearly discouraged, fled away and passing that rugged and penious way, could scarce find again that homely lane where they lodg'd.

81.

82.

THe same Alexander mentions stories of the same nature in his 4th book, and 9th chapter, in these words. A very good friend of mine lately, of a good disposition, and excellent repute, told me what a strange thing, and wonderfull to be related befell him, averring and confirming the truth thereof by many sufficient testimonials, (viz) that when he lodg'd at Neapolis with his kinsman and acquaintance: at mid-night I heard one crying, and calling for help, when I had lighted a candle, I ran to him to know what the matter was, and there I beheld the Devill and one of his Furies, laying violent hands upon a youth in the road-way crying out, and struggling with them; he poor man run to him, when he came near him and got good hold on his doublet and hand, and along time pulling and rugging with them to no purpose, at last he call'd upon God for help, & with much ado he set him at liberty. When he had entertained this young man at his home which was much troubled in mind, he had not power to go from him. For he was so timerous and horribly affrighted, that he knew not what he did, believing always he saw that spectral before him. In fine when he came to himself, he told the whole story from the beginning how it was. He was one of a perverse and wicked conversation, a despiser of God, and disobedient to his Parents, whom he had at that time reviled, rail'd against, and contumeliously reproach'd. When they blessed him, he went from them most direfully cursing.

83.

TThomas Monachus, a good man, of whose honesty and fidelity I have large experience: told me seriously, when he was in a Monastery, and Cloysters in the Mountain of Lusitania, he discoursed with many, and after many hard speeches, and beatings being troubled in mind he went alone by himself through the woods, where he met one in the shape of a man, of a grim look, an ugly and cruel aspect, a black beard, a long coat. Who being asked why he straggled alone out of the ways answered, that he had lost his horse, which he used to ride upon, and he thought he was strayed into the next fields: and when through many windings and turnings they went together to look this horse, they came to a River in the Channell whereof were many obscure and dangerous gulphs. Whereupon Monachus, that he might the better passe over, pul'd off his shoes, the other was very earnest with him to get upon his shoulders, and he would carry him over. He yielding

ding his assent, gat fast about the others neck, that went into the Flood, and espying his feet not to be like other mens, but of a foul and ugly shape. Taking notice thereof he was terribly affrighted and call'd upon Providence for help, which when he heard, he said, presently that ugly vision vanish quite away, with a querulous noise, and so strong a whirl-wind, that it blew up an Oak not far from thence by the roots, not breaking the boughs; but he was in such an amaze, that he lay all along, a long time, as 'twere without a Soul, and unless he had foreseen it, he was perswaded that this devill would have cast him headlong into the deepest gulphs of this River.

But of all that ever I heard or saw, that was the most remarkable, which of late most certainly happened at Rome, when amongst the Gabii a certain desperate youth of mean descent, ill-bred, and of a wicked life, had upbraided, taunted, and defamed his father, and being therefore rost and troubled with these furies, he calls on the Devill, to whom he had devoted himself, and thinks to go to Rome, to plot some wicked design against his father. In his journey he meets the Devill like some lowre lookt fellow, of an uncompt beard and locks; and an old decayed vesture, who keeping him company, demands of him the cause of his sodnesse and trouble, he replyed that his father and he had some words, but he had resolved a wicked design on him. To whom the Devill answered, that he should have the same fortune, and he would proceed to vindicate his quarrels. Night approaching, they come to a City, they turn into the first Inne they come at, and together they lay, the one being fast asleep, the other awake was saying his prayers. Whereupon that most ugly Diabolicall fury brake forth the chamber with such might, noise, and violence, that he pul'd down the rassers, top of the house, and brake all the Tyles. This young man being affrighted, and almost kill'd at this sight, repented him of his forepast life and vicious course, endewed now with another spirit, leading the remainder of his life as far off, and was a good example. Hec ille.

Vhen Alexander the Lawyer of the City Naples lay sick in his bed at Rome, he saw plainly before him as he was awake the species of a woman of an excellent beauty: which when he looked upon, a long while musing, saying nothing, and be thinking himself he might be deceived. But when he perceived his senses to be fresh and lively, and that the shape never stirred from him, asks her who she was, she smiling a little, and answering what he had said, as though she intended to mock him, having a long time behold him, went away. Alexander, lib. 2. cap. 9.

The

86.

THe spirits which go to and fro in houses, are either harmlesse, or fierce and cruel ones, the harmlesse may be termed Lares which at midnight chiefly haunt houses, and seem by some kind of noise to do something, when as indeed they do nothing, Wierm writes, that when he was a child, those which are called Lares, were often heard in the dwellings of his progenitors, which the day before they came to them, the Merchants buying Hops, used to imitate the sound and noise of bags roll'd down the stairs, (by which trick his father gain'd much) it being alwaies a fortunate and true omen. To these were like those which the Germans call Guteli from the good they do, especially to them that watch and look to cattle, seldome appearing to any other. And not differing from those, they call Trulle, who in a counterfeit habit, as well womans as mans in many other nations; but chiefly among the Susona. Now they which are cruell, and tormenting spirits are called Larue, which every way affright and disturb the whole Family.

87.

IN the mettall-mines both kinds are to be found, Teste Georgio Agricola libro de animantibus subterraneis. And the fierce ones indeed, or they which are terrible to look upon, most commonly molest and are obnoxious to the mettall-men. Such an one was Annebergius that Hobgoblin, which killed twelve labourers, or more at a blast in the Cave, that is called Corona Rosacea, left by that name, although it abounded with Silver, this puffed came forth by opening his mouth when he appeared like a horse, having a long neck, and horrible eyes. Such another was also Schneebergius that Ghost, clad in a black hood, who in the Mine named Georgian, scintuated one of the workmen which he took from the ground, in the top of that concavity, which heretofore was fertile of silver, crushing together his body. Judeus was by one of these spirits forc't from a very commodious Mine among the Turcae, which often appeared to them like a Goat, having Golden horns. But some of the Germans, and likewise the Greeks call the quiet and gentle spirits, Cobalos, in that they are imitators of men, for they shew themselves merry, they laugh, and seem to do many things when they are doing nothing at all. Others call them Small men of the mountains, because they appear as dwarfs, 3. spans long. They seem to be drowly dotards, habited like the mettall-men, These are inoffensive to them, although sometimes perhaps they may provoke the workmen with throwing gravell, but they never hurt them unlesse by jeering or railing they provoke them. They are chiefly seen to work, or haunt those Caves out of which mettals may be digged or at least wile they hope so. Therefore these labourers are not frighted from their work, but hereby promising themselves good successe, they are more chearfull, and work more eagerly, wishing for them.

T Heodosius the Emperour, having spent and exhausted his treasure by continual Wars, imposed a new subsidy upon his Cities, onely the city Antioch refused to make payment of it: and not onely so, but having made a mutiny, the people in a contumelious manner, drew up and down the City, the Image of Placella the Empreffe (though already dead) sitting and fastning a rope to her feet. Which villanous act the Emperour, as well he might, took so hainously, that (unlesse being perswaded by the intreaties of D. Flavianus the Bishop, and the authority of D. Ambrosius, he had bin bound by oath to determine nothing against offenders, till the 13th day was over) he had made there also a great Massacre among them, as he had done at Theſſalonica. Nicephorus lib. 12. cap. 42. 'Tis reported that night before this mutiny, a tall woman was seen in the Ayre, huge and very great, of a most dreadfull and fearfull countenance, which running through the streets of the City in the Ayre, beat the Ayre with her fan, making such a noise, as they used to do, which in dark places excite beasts to rage. Idem lib. 9. cap. 42.

88.

Among the Italians there was a Governour of a City, which most proudly and covetously domineer'd over his Citizens, and by his high words, and fierce deeds was wont to punish his subjects in a slavish manner, though they did those things he commanded, and performed them well, yet for small causes did he torment or fine them. By chance a good honest fellow, though of small substance, poor, and despicable, did so beat his Lord and Masters greyhound, whereof he was wonderfully carefull, that he thought for it he should be put to death. When the Governour understood it, being very angry, and with a stern and menacing countenance grievously chiding him, commanded him to be cast into a most base prison, and there being fast bound, was kept in a miserable custody. After some dayes came they who were willing to observe his commands, as they used to do, the prison dore being fast, and as well the dores as every passage made close, that he could not get forth, they could find him no where within the Prison, who searching a long time, and he appeared not, neither was there any step or symptome of his escape to be seen, they brought the news to their Governour: which seeming to him incredible, he was strangely amazed. Within three dayes the same dores being strongly barr'd, that very same he, which of late was deputed to prison, every one being ignorant thereof, was again forc't and thrust into the same Prison, and like to one in an amaze, requested that he might with all speed be admitted to his Lord, for he had somewhat of consequence to tell him in all haste, which was not to be delayed. And when he was presently brought to him, he told him he was released by some of the infernall crew, that since he could not endure the ugliness of the Prison, he was grown desperate, and being afraid of his doom, not knowing what to do, he cal'd call'd to an evill spirit, that he would be helpfull to him, and release him out of that ill-favoured dungeon. A little while after the Devill appeared to him in the same Prison, of a deformed shape and terrible countenance, and that he had agreed with him that he should free him from thence and all Iron bolts and locks, and should cast him into the infernall places, great depths, and the lowest part of the Earth, there he might view and behold all things, the torments of the wicked and their ungodly places: their eternal darknesse and miseries, loathsome and horrible corners, their Kings and chief Rulers, were tortured, covered, as 'twere with thick darknesse, and tormented with the burning lights of furies: he saw also the Bishops with their mitres and robes, richly adorn'd and beautified with gems, and many other wretched effigies of all sorts, ages, and ranks, afflicted in severall habits, lying along in profound and deep gulphs, punish'd in eternall torments, and their damned wickednesses everlastingly tormented with grief and wo, amongst whom he had noted many which he knew in their lifetime, and especially an intimate and familiar friend of his, who while he was living was his companion, and he said to him speaking unto him, he knew him very well, and calmly required of him, what businesse he had there, and what he expected there. He making answer, that his country was by hard duties and rigid government entralled, was charged, to tell the Governour, and bid him have a care, that he did so no more, and that he should not oppresse his subjects by burthensome taxes, and unjust toll-money, for he foretold him that there was a place, which he saw not far off left for him. And that he might not doubt his promise, he saith that he should call to mind, their private consultation and mutuall agreement, which they made when they were Souldiers together, whereof no body knew; which when he had readily declared and recited not onely what was said and covenanted, but every word, and their promises, whereby they were both obliged to each other: the governour hearing these things in order, being more serious, and attentive, was wonderfully amazed, and great trembling fell upon him, when he considered how those things, which were disclos'd to him alone, and never to any other, that dull pate, and blockish fellow, as 'twere inspired with some deity, should know them, and repeat them with an undaunted look. To this miracle also is added, That he asked him, with whom he was talking with in Hell, who appeared in handsome and neat habit and attire, whether they were any wayes punish'd, that went in rich apparell, and vestments of Gold; he replyed, with everlasting burning and amongst the greatest torments they were with continuall wo oppressed and tormented, and that which before glittered with Gold and Purple, was now all flame and fire. He willing to make triall thereof, put his hand nearer to the Purple, being warned by him not to touch it, and yet it could not be, but by the blast of heat, the palm of his hand which he put forth to the Purple, was on fire. For it was almost wasted with blisters and vile Ulcers, as with with some poyson. St. Antonies fire, or some other mischief, that seemed to spread it self further and further. Moreover they which went unto him, relate that he, after he was got from Hell, was sore troubled in mind, and his senses of hearing and seeing were very much stupefied, that he was alway musing, seldome spake a word (though oftentimes ask't). But he came home with so stern an aspect, and so deformed a countenance, that whom his wife and children very well knew; after he came from thence, he was so much altered in his face, and all parts of his body, that they could hardly believe he was the same man, and oftentimes his acquaintance and kindred spake to him, weeping for his ugliness, and the mans Idea so deformedly altered; he had scarce time to dispose of his substance, and to give good counsell to his children before his death. Alexander libro 6. cap. 21. Genial Dier.

89.

A Certain Hetrurian ploughing in the fields belonging to the Tarquinius, his Plough going too deep into the ground, one named Tages, as the story goes, brake forth in stature like a child, but in Wisedome a grave and discrete Senatour, and spake to him that held the Plough, he being affrighted, cry'd out. At the noise whereof, at the first there was a great concourse of neighbours, then by little, and little the rumour being farther spread abroad, within few dayes all Hetruria was assembled into that field. All hearing this child, that he spake many things, his words were carefully observed and written down, from which by long experience came all their divination; yet so, that if it spread to any other Nations, the Hetrurians made most and chief account thereof. Franciscus Petrarcha.

90.

Drusus made Consull and warring with Germany by the name of Cesar Augustus, and having subdued the greatest part thereof, resolved to go forward, a very great woman met with him, and seemed to say to him. Whither goest thou insatiable Drusus? Is it not in the power of the fates to see all these things? but go thy wayes, for now the end both of thy life and works is at hand. Then going home, he fell into a disease, whereof he died. Leonarus.

91.

Dunstun an English Abbot, when by the scurrilous gestures of an Hobgoblin leaping and skipping before him, he understood that Edmund King of England was dead, he hastned to the Kings Court, and in the middle of his journey he was better certified concerning the Kings death. Vincenium lib. 24. cap. 71.

92.

Adrianus Patricius being sent from Basilium the Emperour against the Carthagenians had in Peloponnesus some Ships in their station. On a certain night the shepheards heard those spirits that haunt thereabouts speaking one to another, and saying, That the day before the Sicilians or Syracuse were taken and destroyed. This ru-93.

they come to him as soon as he could, for he was largely set loose from the intervall places, and had somewhat to tell him: Pompey sent many of his familiar friends, to whom Gabius said, that Pompey his causes pleased the Gods below, and his devout parties were an argument of Truth, that he would undertake to pacify them if he did what he was commanded, and so it fell out. Plinius lib. 7. cap. 52. But the event it self discovered Satan's mock. Cesar with the Gods above, being victour, sent Pompey to his underneath.

TWO brave and excellent young men, who came new out of the fields, told the news of the victory concerning the Tarquiniis, which warred with their associates the Romans. They were thought to be Cassio and Pollax, L. Domitius, who first called them in the market, when then were rubbing and cherishing their horses, which were all of muck sweat, admired the newes. Suetonius saith that they meeting him as he came home out of the countrey, bad him declare the victory. A while after, 'tis reported, that they smiling on him, handled his beard, and it was, of a black colour, presently made a red beard, (I speak the truth) and therefore this man was called Enobarba. Plutarchus in Emilio.

96.

THE Devill having transformed himself into an Angell appeared to Rathbodus commander of Erisia, with a Golden Diadem, on his head, and many jewels thereon, and his vesture wrought with Gold, saying, Most valiant Sir, who hath seduced and misled you, that you would go from the service of God? Do not do thus, but be constant in those things you have learnt, and you shall be advanced to Golden Palaces, which I shall shortly give you for ever. To morrow therefore receive Vulfrannus, who is the chief teacher of Christians, and enquire of him, what famous everlasting Mansion that is, which he promiseth you; which if he cannot shew you, send messengers of both sides, and I will be their leader, and will shew them that Golden house, and most beautifull Mansion, which I promise: Rathbod, being very carefull, related all to his Vulfrannus, who told him: that these were meer delusions of the Devill. The Commander answered, that he would become a Christian if he would shew him that famous Mansion. They presently send one of Erisia on the behalf of the Governour, and a Priest on the behalf of St. Vulfran, who going a little from the Town, they met one of their comrades, who said to them, Make haste quickly, and I will let you see the glorious Mansion, which is provided for Rathbod the General. They going on in a spacious way, and places they knew not, saw a way adorn'd with divers kinds of Marble bravely polish'd, and a house afar off, as of Gold; and they came to a street before the house, bestrewed with Gold, and many Gems. They going into the house of admirable beauty, and splendour, saw in it a Throne of a wonderfull magnitude. Then spake their guide to them. This is the Mansion prepared for Raibod the Commander. To which the Priest bring in an amaze, said to them, If these things be made by God, let them remain for ever; but if by the Devill, let them perish instantly. And signing himself with the sign of the holy Crosse, their leader was transformed into a Devill, and the Golden house into mire and dirt. But the messengers were staying in a fenny and thorny place, and in three dayes space, finishing their journey, they returned back to the Town, and found their Commander dead, and related what they had seen, to S. Vulfran. Anno 718. Vincentium lib. 23. cap. 146. ex Ozone Presbytero Sigeberto, et Erpordienfis cap. 66.

97.

98.

Valentinus one of the Bishops of the Church of Millain, defender of the Arrians, a man very unconstant, and of small reputation, being buried in the Church of the blessed Martyr Syrus, there was heard by night fearfull clamours, whereat the two keepers being raised, they ran to see what the matter was, and they espied two evill spirits or Ghosts drawing forth Valentinus out of the Temple, being fast bound by the feet, and crying out. In the morning they saw his corps laid in another place without the Temple. Gregorius Turanensis lib. 4. Dialog. cap. 53. vixit sub Justino Imperatore.

99.

ABout the year of our Lord 1096, near a place called Wormin, there appeared a great troop of armed men for many dayes and nights, running to and fro; and sometimes back again into a mountain, from whence they were wont to come. On a certain night a Monk, taking some associates with him, and fortifying himself with the sign of the Crosse; to the Mountain he goes, and adjures all that came forth, by verue of the holy and undivided Trinity, to tell him their names. To whom one of the company said, We are Phantasmes, and no living Souldiers, but onely the spirits of Men, sometimes warring and fighting for the Prince of this world; and in a short time after killed in this very place; The weapons, Hennesse, and Horset, which when we were alive, were the instruments of our sin, are now being dead, the tokens of our torment: whatsoever ye now see upon us is all on fire, though ye cannot see the fire. The Monk furthermore askt them, If they could receive no help by men. Then the spirits made answer to him: We may by fasting, Prayers, and especially by the offering of the body and blood of Christ, and thus we beseech you to do. When they had thus said, the whole company, as twere with one voice, cryed out, Orate pro nobis, orate pro nobis, orate pro nobis. And presently they all vanished into fire, and the mountain it self flam'd mightily. Chronicon Hirsaugiense.

100.

IT is reported, that a Ghost prescoring it self to Cicero his nurse, I did foretell, that she cherished great good to all the Romans. These things appearing but dreams and vain phantasmes, he in a short time manifested, that it was a true Oracle. For consulting with with Apelle his Oracle, how she might obtain greatest renown, answer was made by the Oracles, that she should follow her own ingenuity, the ringleader of her life, and not the vulgar estimation. Plutarchus in Cicero.

A Stubborn obstinate fellow a little before he died (as report goes) said, that looking into a Pond, he saw a shadow in the water, which with a drawn Sword threatened death to him. Sa. bellus lib. 1. cap. 4. And when Annus Tacitus was Emperour, these were the Prognosticks of his death. His fathers sepulchre opening of its own accord, Likewise his Mothers Ghost which was long since dead, appeared to him. And his brothers Spectrall with great horrour, in various shapes and places. Pulposus Lib. 1. cap. 4.

101.

Constantius the Emperour being converted from the Persian war to quiet Julian in France, and in a great quandary, not having so good successe as formerly, was much affrighted, with nightly visions. And raising an Army, on a night between sleeping and waking, he thought he saw as were his father, proffering a fair handsome child to him, he took it up, and laid it in his bosome, throwing away the ball which he had in his right hand. Which evidently demonstrated alteration of the times, though the Interpreters according to their apprehension, made a more favourable construction thereof. Afterwards he acknowledged to his familiar friends and acquaintances, that his Genius, who was his Protestour and defence, had now left him, he that heretofore had contrived and devised many things with him most familiarly, at that time seemed ugly and dreadfull, as if he would forsake him. These things appeared to him going from Antioch, towards Tasus. Cassiodorus.

102.

There was a Temple of Jupiter at Apamea both very spacious, and also very famous for divers, and most specious Ornaments: which when the Præfess of the East, with the two Tribunes entering the City, would have demolished, upon the serious survey of it, they found it to be so firmly workt, and of such huge and solid stone, that they thought it impossible to ruine so vast and firm a piece of workmanship. When Marcellus the Bishop, seeing him afraid of the work, desired him to make for other Cities, and he went to his prayers to God, that he would put some end to so difficult a work. And in a very short time after, there came one to the Bishop, who having contracted for a certain sum of Money for his pains, promised he would fire the foundations of the Temple, and by that means utterly demolish it. But whilst he was applying his fire-works, a black Devill appeared to him, and restrained the naturall force of that Element. Which when Marcellus understood, he went into the Temple, and praying most earnestly to Almighty God, repelled the Magick of the Devill, and presently the foundation took fire fire, and when the Piles were consumed, the whole structure went to wrack, and so it was utterly destroyed. Nicéph. lib. 12. cap. 27.

103.

104.

THe Filappii inhabit a part of the Peninsula of Scandinavia. Amongst them there is an innumerable company of Specters, which converse feast and discourse with them commonly, nor can they by any means be laid or driven away. They, when they are most terrified and hush'd by these Ghosts, bury their dead friends under their fire-places, or hearths, and give them in charge to take care they be not molested in that nature: by this spell alone do they defend and save themselves from the vexations and terrour of the Devils. For if they punctually observe this, no Apparition ever after molesteth them, but if they neglect it, they are continually terrified and incumbered with the Visions of their dead friends. At this time they are lesse infested, and have lesse incanting amongst them then formerly in regard the King of Sweden hath most strictly prohibited the use of them, and as much as in him lies, takes care that the Christian Religion be taught them, and that their Children be brought up therein. Casper Pencerus de Danesha.

105.

VVE have it reported that a Gentleman in Bavaria of a most noble extract, was so grieved for the death of his wife, that abandoning all comforts whatsoever, he betook himself to a solitary life. At length when he mourned without measure or date, his wife appeared to him in the night, being risen from the dead, and told him that indeed she had once finished her naturall course in this life, but yet by his importunity she was now restored to life, and commanded by God to use his society yet longer, but upon this condition that they should again be married by a Priest: and furthermore that he should abstain all railing and blasphemous words which he had formerly accustomed to use, for indeed, this was the principall or onely cause why he had been deprived of her, and that she should again presently depart this life, as soon as he should but utter any word of that nature. These things being thus performed, she took care of his household affairs as formerly, and bare him some children, but was all the while but of a sad and wan countenance. But many years after her husband coming home in drink, and giving his maid some hard words, in anger, more then becom'd a sober Man, she went from the bed to the cup-board, where she was to fetch some fruit for her husband, and there left her clothes standing at the Chest where the Apples were kept, without any body in them, and was never seen more. This I have heard spoken by many worthy and authentic persons, who affirmed that a Captain of Bavaria told it to a Captain of Saxony for a truth. This Sabins writes in the tenth book of his Metamorphoses.

In

106.

107.

108.

109.

110.

111.

IN the 1045. year of Christ, Bruno the Bishop of Herbipolis, with Henry the third of that name, went to Boiaria Orientalis, or in the East by water upon the River Danubius, but not in the same Ship with him. It is a Town of Austria which they call Greizan; above which there be craggy Rocks, and great heaps of Stone that arise, and lye out into the waters, by reason whereof Danubius (as they say) is carried with a very great violence, and exceeding noise which may be heard far off, and frothing by reason of the violence of the water. The Teutonick hold this for an ominous and most dangerous and destructive place to Navigators, and call it Strudelion. Bruno (as I said before) accompanied the King his kinsman in another Ship, and when they dashed upon a very great Rock in the Sea, the shape of a black Æthiop appeared, a Vision (as the event testified) sufficiently apparent and ominous, and stood upon the Rock halcing to Bruno; Ho ho; Bishop (sayes he) I am thy evill Angel and whithersoever thou goest, thou art mine; I have nothing to say to thee at present, but thou shalt shortly see me again. Whilst they all abhorred that prodigy, the Bishop having used that immortal sign of the Crosse, and holy Charms, and Verles, the evill spirit left all there deceived. And this Rock is yet noted for it, on which there was a Tower built of Stone, without any beam or roof, and from thence being sely named, retains it to this very day. From whence having sailed on for about ten thousand paces, they turned in at the Town of Bisulung, where the widow Richta entertained and feasted them very nobly, (whose Husband Adalbero of Ebersperg had the Dynastie of the Castle of the chief Boiaria, which is now a Temple, and had died the last before) and desired that Bosenburg and the farms which in those parts her husband held upon curtesy, might be conferred upon Welfe the third her Nephew by her brother. The Cesar came up to supper, and whilst before Bishop Bruno, and Alenanus President of Ebersperg, and Richta stretching out his right hand he consented to all her desires, upon a sudden, the rafters of the house fell and slew Bruno. Adventinus lib. 5. Annal. Boiarum.

They say that in the Mountains of Bohemia sometimes a Monk useth to appear, whom they call Rubezal, and that many times he is seen in the baths, and doth frequently joyn himself to trayailers that go that way when they are in the woods, and bid them be of good courage, telling them, that in regard they are ignorant of the way, he will lead them strait thorow the woods: whom as soon as he hath led into the most path-lesse places of the wood, that they know not which way to turn themselves, he leaps into a Tree and makes such a laughter as causes the woods to ring again. This Monk or Rubezal is the Devill, who having taken to him the shape of a Monk, plays these pranks.

On

108.

ON a certain time there was a Monster taken in the Sea, in all things like unto a woman of a stupendious beauty, and amiableness, whom one of the fisher-men, or Sailers took for his wife, when she had been kept in the ship a while, and had one child by her, three years after when they came to the same place where the Monster was taken, she leapt out of the Ship into the waters, and took the child with her. The child perished in the Sea, and she vanished out of their sight, and was never seen more by any of them. It is an easy matter (saith Luther) for Satan to assume the shape of a Man or woman. ex colloquiis Lutheri.

109.

One descended of a most illustrious progeny, invited Martin Luther and some other learned men to his Countrey-house at Wittenberg, and when for his pleasure, he rode forth to hunt the hare, a Hare of an incredible bignesse, and Forces, running very swiftly over the fields, objected themselves to his view. The noble man being excellently well-mounted, followed them with a great shout, and presently his horse fell down dead under him, and the Hare vanished into the Ayre. This was a truly Satanicall Phantasm.

110.

IN the 1546. year after Christ, Martin Luther related at a Supper, at Isteia, That at Thuringia, about the mountain which they call Hieselberg, certain noble youths, very intent in the night time in catching of Hares, took in their Nets about eight, which when they returned home, and hung up, they found to be in the morning onely so many horse-heads, such as are to be found stinking in some loathsome ditch. Ex colloquiis Lutheri.

111.

AT Rotenberg a certain man most gloriously attired, and one that bragged of great Nobility and Riches, did frequent the house of a very honest Man, and had two companions no lesse gorgeous in their apparel then himself. He brought a Fidler, and a Piper, made Banquets, called Dances, and all under pretence of marrying the daughter of this good Man, a very vertuous Maid. He affirmed, he was born to Noble Parents, had immense Riches, Castles, Farms, Towns, and many of them in certain Countries. Nor did he want any thing this world could give, but a Wife to his liking, qualified, and educated. This familiarity of his guest, and his companions, pleased not the Master of the house, which caused him to call in the Minister of the place against they came, that so whilst they were at Supper, he might intermeddle some holy discourse out of holy Writ. These Colloquies very much offended his guest, and his friends. Wherefore they desired some other subject, and argued that many witty conceits and neat jests were more fitable to feasting, and did more exhilarate the hearts of men then the exposition of holy writ, therefore they would intreat them to be no more troublesome to them, with discourse of that nature. By which the Master of the house found what diabollicall spirits they and cunning delusions of Devils.

they had, and being now well armed against the snares of the Devil, he said to his guests Avance, or depart; O ye wicked Caitiffs, you shall have nothing to do with me nor mine; we are Baptized and Redeemed by the precious Blood of Christ, and he will defend us against your Diabolical machinations. At these words the devillish impostor, together with his hellish companions vanished, leaving behind them a most noisome stink, and the dead bodies of three men who had been hanged. Martinus, in collectione.

A Certain Man who abounded with wealth, living about thirty Miles from Gorlitz, inviting some friends to a supper most exquisitely cooked, and they refusing to come, he grew so extremely angry, that in a rage he said, If they will not come, I will kill the Devils in Hell would. This wish was his destruction: for immediately a great company of them which he had called for in his wrath, came to him, which he not knowing at the first sight, went to enter in their courtously. But when instead of hands they stretched forth their claws to him, being exceedingly affrighted he well thought what kind of guests he had in his house. Thus trembling with his Wife he fled out of his Castle, and left an Infant in the Cradle, and a Fool sitting on a Stove by it, to see to it. But the Fool brought the Child safe from amongst those fiends: Jobus Pinzelius, de horaculis.

Some florid and learned Men in the Rast Council, for recreation sake, went forth into a small Wood, friendly to confer about the disputes of those times. As they were going along, they heard a pretty little Bird singing most sweetly like a Nightingale, they are ravished at her pleasant Musick, not knowing what Birds note it should be. Entering the Wood, they espy a small Bird sitting on a Tree, and singing most pleasantly, without giving over; they were all very attentive: At last one having more courage, and better spirited then the rest, speaks thus to the Bird: I assure thee in the Name of Christ to tell us who thou art. The Bird made answer, That she was one of the damned Souls, and was designed to that place, till the last day, and then she must undergo everlasting torment. When she had said this, she flew away from the Tree, crying; O how immense, and of long continuance is Eternity. Philippus Melancthon saith, I am of opinion that this was the Devil inhabiting there. All that were present at this adjuration fell very sick, and within a little after dyed. In collectione Martinus.

A Certain powerful Man, and very ancient, had devoted himself to conjure the Devil, maintaining his stuly herein by that saying; The seed of the woman shall break the Serpents head. as if man had power given him over the Devil, that he might call him forth, and cast him out, when he pleased. I am not (saith Luther) of that belief, to dare use the comment of Devils. And added moreover, what happened to Nicolaus Ambsdorffius Bishop of Cix. who is himself himself related it, and truly acknowledged on a night in the City Maidenburg, when he was Priest there, sleeping by night in an Inn, he was awakened by two Noblemen long since dead, before whom went two young men carrying torches in their hands, and not being afraid, when there was no danger, being commanded to arise, he did so. There these Noble-men dictated Letters to him, which he wrote, and charged him to present them to a certain Prince: When they had done these things, they vanished. He delivered the Letters to whom he was commanded.

An History of strange Apparitions,

115.

IN the year 1545, an evil spirit straggled up and down the City Romil, having the shape sometimes of an Hare, sometimes of a Goose, and sometimes of a Weazel, threatening with a loud voice, that he would burn the City. Which did not a little terrify the Inhabitants thereof. Paracelsus, lib. 1.

116.

IN the year 1534. On Christmas Eve in a City of Saxony, *Sa-*tan taking upon him the form of a Man, came confidently to Laurentius Daurus, Priest of that place, when he should hear them that were the next day to come to the holy Supper of the Lord, to make confession of their sins, earnestly desiring him to hear his confession. Being admitted, he belched out most horrible blasphemies against Christ the Son of God. But being resisted by the Minister, with the power of Gods Word, he departed, leaving an insufferable scent behind him. Idem.

117.

AT Freiburg, a famous City in Switzerland, was there a Man renowned for his Religion and Age, who being very dangerously sick, and almost at the point of death, The Devil, clad in a prelatical garb, came unto him, left by chance all alone, and perplexing and troubling the old Man in that agony, demanded of him, to tell him in order all the faults which he had committed in his life, and he having in a credulous paper and ink, would set them all down. But when the old Man by Gods Word, mightily opposed the Devils demands, and yet he would not desist from his importunity, at last said the old Man, Since you presse it so upon me, that I should particularly declare to you my faults; write then, First of all beginning thus; The seed of the woman shall break the Serpents head. Which he hearing, threw down his paper and ink upon the ground, and leaving behind him an ill savour, vanished away. The good old Man not long after departed in peace. Doddr. willerm. et Manlius, in collectionibus.

118.

There was at Heidelberg a Doctor of Divinity, a favourer of the Gospel, whose servant was born in Lower Germany, when having visited his Father, and was returning to Heidelberg, not far from the City, he met an herleman sitting upon a great horse, by whom he was violently caught up upon the horse; when he perceived himself to be on horseback, that he might take heed of falling, ling, the other horseman straightway vanished; but he was snatch'd off the horse into the ayre aloft, and presently thrown down with great force near the Clayhard by the bridge, where for some time deprived of his senses, he lay as if he were dead; at last when he had recovered some strength, he apprehended, that he was nigh to the City, he rose up, and going into his Inn, he lay there half a year, before he could be restored to his former health.

IN the lower Germany (they say) walks a Monster, in the bignesse of a Man, but in the form of a dogg, that breathed upon them, that wereto dye, as if he smelt on them. And 'twas seen by many, upon whom it breathed not, and they did not dye that year. They called it the Index of a Funeral; They which feared death was coming upon them, hastened by Idolatrous Masse to get relief and salvation. Thus Satan brought Man to Idolatry.

NOt far from Torga, one born of a noble lineage, walking over the Fields to refresh himself, met one in the habit of a Knight or Gentleman (but it was the Devil) complementing with him, he takes him to wait upon him, not knowing at that time what he was, and commits the care of his horses to him. This noble man was very impious and lived chiefly by robbery and pillage, for which purpose he had got him a fit servant. On a time when he was to go a journey, he commended his Horse to him above all things. His servant conveys the Horse up into a very high Tower, the Horse out of the Tower knows his Master coming home, and putting forth his head out of the Turret-window, he neighs loud, his Master greatly wondering, asks who it was that carried up his horse thither: that good servant answers, 'twas he that so carefully performed his Masters commands. Then were they constrained to let down the Horse again, (being fastned with Ropes) from the Tower. It happened moreover, that they whom this noble man had plundered, pursued him, then saith the servant to his Master; Master, fly, and presently he pulls forth a device out of his budget, whereby to prevent the Horses of them that followed after, and to stop their course. At length being cast into Prison, he implores his servants assistance. The servant makes answer, that he was fast bound with fetters, and he could not set him free. The Master is very urgent, till he perswades his servant to do his endeavour herein for him. Then saith the servant: I will set you at liberty, but upon this condition, that you stir not with your hands, and make no signs for your defence. He carries him away being taken from hence, with his chains and fetters, a great height into the Ayre. He being amazed, cryes out, O Eternall God, whither am I a going; and immediately the Devil casts him down into a Moorish place. Then making haste home to his Wife, bids her go help her Husband that stuck fast in the Fennes, and was bound with Fetters.

121.

Certain Monks travelling with their Governour or Father, as they call him, upon with an Host, that had one of his Chambers haunted with an evill spirit. The Host being glad of the Holy fathers coming to his house, entertained them courteously, in hopes they could by their enchantments easily cast forth that Ghost, and therefore makes a bed for them in that room. At night when these Holy men were fast asleep, this foul spirit often twitched and pulled them by the hair, till they made them bold. At length Guardian conjures the spirit, and charges him to go from thence into the Monastery. This evill spirit does as he is bidden, and having changed his Colony, was there before the Monks returned home; he salutes and welcomes them coming in into the Monastery, and proffers them his service. The Monks entertain him, and point him out his place in the kitchen, and give him a hood and a bell hanging by him, whereby to know him, and they often employed him to carry drink, and many other things which they wanted. When he went for Beer, he would not be cheated of his measure; telling them; See, I give you good measure, do you likewise give me good Measure. Finally, he hanged the Cooks servant, that often vexed and troubled him, cross over a beam, throwing sometimes hot water, sometimes dirty water upon him. But as to his life, he did not prejudice it. The Monks fearing a sad event hereof made resignation of their office to this their servant. Ex colloquio Lutheri.

122.

Regentin, the Popes Nuncio in the Councell of Trent, in the year 1552. the 25. day of March, was very busy in writing letters to the Pope, and continued his employment all night. Then arising to refresh himself, lo, he saw a black Dog, of such a bignesse as was not usuall, fiery eyes, and his ears hanging down to the ground coming in, and directly towards him he came, and at last he fell down underneath the Table. Being suspected and amazed hereat, when he came to himself, he calls to his servants, that were in a chamber hard by, he bids them bring a light, and to search out the Dog. And when he could in no place be found, he took a sad conceit, and falling into a discase, he died. Dying also, they say he cryed out to his servant, to beat away the Dog that came up to his bed. Stedam lib. 23.

123.

A Halberstadt was there one that abounded in wealth, every day living in riot, and following his own delight and pleasure that he became to careless of Religion, Christian piety, and eternal salvation, that he did not stick to say, if he might alwaies live so here upon Earth, he would never envy God in the fruition of Heaven. Shortly after (before he was aware) he died. After his death, every day in the Evening such strange Apparitions were seen in his stately houses, that every body left them, and no body durst inhabit them. That Rich Epicure appeared with his guests in the dining room, which he had divided for his delicacies, and Banquets, that servants stood by giving attendance, with lights in their hands, setting on Golden cups and Vessels upon the Table and filling it with most gallant dishes; the Fiddlers moreover, and Musicians were standing by, and so gallantry was wanting, that any rich man usually enjoyed, when he was alive. By Gods permission, and the operation of the Devils, these pleasures were so visible to the eyes of men, that others might be terrified from that horrid impiety and ungodliness of the Epicureans. Act. 16. 2.

in

IN the year 1559. In Martha fell out a very strange thing, which many of great account and credit did affirm truly so to happen. In harvest time, on a sudden appeared some men in the fields, at first fifteen, at last twelve, all of an unwonted magnitude and an odious shape, both first and last were without heads. All these having scythes did on a cluster reap down the Grass, that the noise of the Iron was easily heard; yet all this while no Grass were cut. Immediately the report of this marvellous sight came to the Court, and many, both of the Courtiers and Citizens went forth, and were eye-witnesses of this miraculous Vision. Many also going nearer to them, asked of them who they were, and of what Country, and what they would have? To which they made no reply, but set stoutly to their work which they had begun. Some also did dare to lay hands upon them, and to hold them, but they quickly escaped out of their hands. Whereupon it evidently appeared to all that were then present, that they were Spirits. That illustrious Prince of Archie, having convoked many of his most eminent Divines, desired to know of them what they thought of this strange prodigy: Most of them were of opinion, that it was the omen of an ensuing Plague. Fluctus 16. 3.

124.

IN the year 1530. on the 18, 19, and 20th of July, near Spira, there was a Vision on this manner. Three fishermen, when endeavouring to catch some Salmon in the River Reine, they lost their labour, they washed their Nets, and laid them down to sleep. When they had so done, a Monk coming to them, bailed one of the Fishermen, and bid him go on the further bank of Reine. The Fisherman was obsequious to the Monks command, and instantly came six more, in look and habit like to Monks, who going into the Ship, sailed along with them over the River Reine. These coming forth, the Ship was with a most violent and swift course brought back again through Reine, and presently some other Monks entering into the same Ship, passed over the River as the former had done. At last, the Fisherman being returned to the place, where he had laid himself down to take rest, shortly after fell sick. On another night, another Fisherman was awakened in the same manner, to transport some Monks over the River Reine, who coming to the Ship, said one of the Monks, this Ship will not hold all that are to go over, you must get a bigger. And passing over the second time, came 32. Monks, clad partly in white, and some in black, with ugly hook-noses, and they going into the Ship, were also carried over, who when they went out, others presently stepped in, and sailed over. But whether the Monks went, and whether the Ship, or how he came back to the place of his rest, the Sailor knew not. And he also within a small time was very ill. On the third night the like chanced to the third man, who being awakened, was likewise charged to take use of a new Ship, to transport more Monks, who not knowing where to acquire one, seemed to go through rough places, and rugged Rocks, till he found a Ship that was new made; into which many Monks, (some of small, others of a great stature, having on black, white, and several kinds of hoods) were Shipped, passing straits wiles through the same River, not speaking one word, and when they were come to an uneven place beset with Trees, they refused to go out, bidding them to Sail on. When the Monks went forth, the Ship of it self came against the Tide, near the City Spira. The Fisherman, not knowing himself, was returned home, and the Ship restored again into his own place. The Monks, when at first they questioned them whether they went, answered towards the City, to sit to the Council. There is one that describes these passages in an Epistle, that calls himself Suredan Canerinus, who also displays and unfolds this Apparition to the life.

125.

Of the same Spectacle, out of an Elegy of GEORGE SABINE.

Here is an ancient City seated on The River Reine, not far from Vangion.

People, of all Nations, enjoy it there Four Roman Generals intomb'd were.

Casarcus' tomb's made it their seat of old,
Whence the name Spira at this day's doth hold.

Here liv'd a noble birth could vaunt,

Of a small fishing Ship, an occupant;

In which when Titan had withdrawn his beams,

He us'd to deceive the Tenants of the Streams.

Unbaited by his Nets, and Hooks did sit and swim,

Of gliding Reine almost upon the brim.

Behold a shape presented to his sight,

Of one he knew not in the edge of night.

His vesture was (as Friars use to wear)

Such a black rout, his crown was shaven bare.

The Fishers greets him at his wonted rate,

And ask him, what makes him abroad so late?

He answer'd he was sent from far by's Lord,
Desir'd him he would wait him o're that Food;
That he might th' sooner gain the other side,
Which certes he granted, ne'er deny'd.
Now the night's near half spent, Boatswain
Had turn'd its course, when, in the third place,
Behold five more in floods towards him came,
Whom he saluted in good Fortunes name;
And ask't them, whether they so late were bound,
When night had finish'd half her run it was found.
One of the five reply'd: Dangers constrain
Us thus by night, for safety to obtain.
We are infested by a wicked crew,
That seek to kill us, & are we are devout.
If thou have any love of good shall,
Then wait on thy Boat to th' other side;
That we may pass the waters by thy means,
And be not hinder'd by the swelling streams;
So shall thy labour prosper at thy will,
And so thy Nets the Fish shall crowding fill.
He gave consent, and them on Boat board'd,
Whereby his Ship they soon and safely board'd;
But then (says he) who shall the freight destroy,
One of them answer'd, we've no coin to pay,
(Thou knowst) to th' people since we are so basefully,
They seldom give us ought, but we'll be gratefully,
If once our fortune shall establish'd be,
We'll well requite thee for thy civility.
He loost from shore, now's Ship did gently glide,
Almost in the middle of the pleasant Tide:
When spissly clouds overdid the Stars, the Sails,
Were over-fill'd with storming Southern gales,
The waters roar, with roaring waves, now rain,
Adds to the storm, and joins the Stars to th' main,
The Marriner, with borrow'd wing struck,
Cries out, what cause is this and how the ill luck?
I saw no presage of a coming blow,
When Sol departed to his western tower;
No Swallow hover'd o're the waves, my eyes
Did see no Heron when the Moon did rise,
She was not black, nor pale, nor Phœbus light,
Abased of its lustre near the night.
These words disturbed more, by th' storming rain,
And by the raging waves th' foam main,
The Ship was near o're-run by the blast,
The waves had almost cover'd the mast,
The Marriner with stretch'd out hands to Heaven,
Implored thence the divine aid, what aid

Thou

Thou wicked wretch, dost pray: (Sayer one Oth' five) cease Sirrah, and let God alone:
 And then took up an heavy Row, which th' poor
 Unhappy Man had us'd to wield before;
 With which his shoulders he so basted o'ne,
 That even unto death he beat him fore.
 At last the Devils wiles appear'd; 'twas plain,
 There did no part oth' fraud unseen remain.
 Their bodies vanish into the whirling wind,
 Nothing was left but stinking smells behind.
 Then soon the Clouds were drawn, and day appear'd,
 The winds allay'd and the weather clear'd.
 Frighted herewith, e'n Jephtha's dog doth baw,
 With's Ship toth' shore, and there oth' Grass doth lie;
 Till Sol appear'd, when by a Neighbour swain,
 Into his home he is convey'd again.
 When telling all to those his friends were by,
 Clos'd up his eyes, and so he dy'd.
 When bright Aurora did next Morn appear,
 And with her Crocean Chariot th' sky did clear.
 A passage like to this, the same receipt,
 And better issue to the thing, expect.
 When first bright Sol o' th' mtn Mountain shone,
 A traveller came journeying all alone.
 Whilst he was on the coasts of Vanglon,
 Just where they placed had the first Mile-Stone,
 Behold a Coach, all of a sable hue,
 Filled with Monks, which seven horses drew,
 Toked in order, but one of the four Wheels, with the axetree, from the Coach were tore.
 The Coachman that did rule the reins therein,
 Had a most repull nose, and visage grim.
 The frighted traveller stood whilst it pass'd
 By him, so fast as they Spectrals were, at last.
 The Coach oth' sudden mounted into th' mind,
 When fire and smoke did follow it behind.
 And the sad Omens of ensuing war,
 A noise as arms etc. etc. did clash and jar:
 He made return toth' City, told it, and i' me
 It was made known by good authority.
 Therefore to you, wh' in other regions dwell,
 I thought my meter bound these things to tell,
 And had they wanted an Interpretation,
 I would have made it. Now the German Nation,
 By their King's discords, heard of nought but jars;
 And now their Monks inflamed had the wars.
 This was the Tempest, this the disjunct wheel,
 This was the smok and flame. This jointly well

Commend unto our God; desire him lay
These Tempests, he'll be good to them that pray.

Magdalena Crucia Hispana, in the chief City of all Cordoba Balisa, in her tender years, was (whether by reason of Poverty, or Devotion it is uncertain) by her poor Parents, placed in the Nunnery of St. Clara: (which she afterwards re-built all anew, and endowed with a fair revenue). This Magdalena, I say, being insnared by a Devill that appeared to her in the form of an Ethiop using many sugred and pleasureable enticements with which tender years are most taken; began to converse very familiarly with him, but with most severe interminations, that no mortall should be made privy to their familiarity. She conversing with the De-vill almost every day, grew more in knowledge then could be expected from her youth, and was admired of all that knew her for her stupendious knowledge, and ingenuity, and singular piety, which the smoothnesse of her behaviour, and the austerity of her life did seem to manifest; she had scarce attained the age of twelve years when this evil spirit, taking the opportunity of bringing her into his full and absolute possession, with glorious and gilded words moved a marriage betwixt them, and easily for the experience she had had of her Improvement, by his means, was this ambitious girl persuaded to it. They join hands, are married, and at last lye together. Magdalena in lieu of a Dowry, promises him the use of her body, to discourse with her, converse with her, and lye with her. The Ethiop on the other side, promised to make her a large Dowry, and that she should by reason of her illustrious sanctity and wisdom, bear great sway throughout all Spain for thirty years and upwards, insomuch that she should excell, or at least equall the most famous that ever went before her. Nor would this lying spirit, in this particular, seem false that so by this his bride, he might deceive all Spain. And whensoever they enjoyed their stolen delights, his servant (for this Ethiop for the honour of the businesse, kept his man) taking her coule, to the life imitated (like some supposititious Sofia) in the Cloister abroad, or in the Temple, her countenance, behaviour in walking, singing, praying, eating, and all other the like. And if perchance, when he had wearied his Lady with pleasures, he went (in pretence of looking that things went right in his Mannour) about the World, at his return he told her all that happed in his travell worth the telling. So she being taken prisoner of Franciscus King of the Gauls; so coming to the Knowledge of Romes being sack't, and telling she was told it by divine Revelation, she grew in great esteem with the chief and noble Men of the Kingdome, and obtained the dignity of Abbesse, all the other Nuns willingly yielding to such eminent sanctity; and entertaining the businesse with exceeding joy in that they conceived great part of the glory, redounded to them who were her instructors. She was famous for many miracles, but those onely lulory, and vain fancies. In a solemn pomp upon a feast day, she was taken up into the Ayre three or four cubits high, and often holding the Image of the blessed child Jesus in her arms; making her eyes the Stuces from whence Rivers of tears issued, she did suddenly extend the excrescency of her hair unto her heels, and by degrees did vanish away. And as often as the Monks at set times and seasons, did take the Sacrament in the Eucharist-basket, there alwayes wanted one of the round pieces of the mysticall bread (being first of all diligently reckoned): which Magdalene did openly shew that she had it in her mouth, and that she received it by the administration of Angels. Hence so much was the fame of her sanctity spread abroad that High-Priests, Emperours, Kings by their letters commended themselves to her prayers, and therefore did Charles the fifth's Queen take great care that her Son Philip should be wrapped in those swathing clothes, which Magdalene had sanctified by her prayers. Thirty years at the least being spent in this diabolically marriage, at length in the year of our Lord, 1540, by Gods blessing and favour, and not by reason of her Merit, Magdalene returned to her self, and began to detest the Devill, but the Ethiop taking grievously her apostacy, and after diverse manners tormenting her, she, beyond all expectation freely discovered her wickednesse, to them whom they call the visitors of that Order, and to them she confessed her sin, implored help, and was by them imprisoned. Neither did the Devill, notwithstanding all this, leave the place, but at morning prayers to the great wonder and amazement of the Monks, was present in the shape and vesture of Magdalene, and oft did perform other her offices. The Monk now abbot of their Abbacie, whom for twelve years they had entertained, when last they were very importunate that the whole manner being found out, Magdalene might be expelled the Cloister, that so those enchantments might cease, Neither was there any great punishment inflicted on her, because of her serious repentance and ingenuous confession; and that, As by her feigned and damoniacal sanctity, she had encreased the superstition of many, So by her true and Christian penitency, she shewed by this memorable example, that the fountains and flood-gates of Gods mercy are not dam'd up, or shut to any repentant sinner.

127.

128.

IN the year 1532. a Noble man out of his tyrannicall malice commanded one of the country men which he had power over, that he should carry home a great Oak out of the wood at once by his horse Cart, and threatned him sore if he did not execute his command; the clown easily understanding that it was utterly impossible for him to obey his Masters precept, entred the Wood with great sighs, and sad complaints: there came to him a Devill, having taken upon him a humane shape, and enquired of him the cause of his grief, to whom the rustick revealed the thing in order. The Devill bad him be of good cheer, and return to his house, he would bring the Oak to his Masters house without delay; the Clown

Clown was scarce got home ere the Devill threw the huge Oak loadned with thick boughs, adwarr before the house of the Noble man, and shut up the passage by reason of the thickness of the Tree boughs; and, when the Oak had consisted an adamant-like hardness, neither could it by any strength or Art be cut; the Noble man was glad to break a wall on the other side of the house, and to make a new gate in his other houses; nor without great trouble and cost. Fincelin, book 2.

THere appeared to a certain honest Matron, a widow, a kind woman to Phillip Melancthon, sitting alone in her Parlour, her Husband being dead a day or two before, having for his companion a Monk of tall stature. The husband spoke to his wife with all the sugred and loving expressions he could, saying, Be of good comfort my Wife, for I am thy Husband; and weighty businesses have compelled me to come to thee; when he had almost talked with her a whole hour, he exhorted her that she would take care that Masse should be celebrated for him being dead; and going away, he importun'd her that she should reach forth her right hand to him, which being reached out, he coloured it as black as a coal and her hand was marked and blotted with that colour all her life after. Fincelin, Book 2.

129.

IN the year 1555. there was a spectrum appeared after this manner. At Brunswiga in the Village of Gahern, two miles distant from Blomenham there was a certain country man, being imployed with his horses and Cart, going into the wood, saw before the entrance of the wood, some troops of horsemen, harness'd all with black armour, wherat being terrified, he ran back to his house and reported that a great troop of Souldiers appeared abroad; the Elders therefore and the Minister of the Word there, accompanying them, hastily went forth, and almost a hundred persons (some men and some women) went with them, and did see these horsemen, and they reckoned them to be about fourteen troops, which immediately divided themselves into two companies, and they being Marshall'd into order, one company stood opposite to the other. At the last there issued out a tall man of a black hue very formidable, out of each company, and both of them lighting from their horses, did view accurately each company. Which being done, they mounted their horses again, the Army being set in rank and file, and the troops set against one another, the horsemen went forward, and filled the whole camp; the country men were spectators of their march untill night came on. But when they heard no further at that time of any war or marching of the foot or horsemen, they all agreed that it was a prodigy from the Devill, or a sign of Gods anger. Fincelin, first Book of Miracles.

130.

131.

IN the year 1567. in Trautenau, a City of Bohemia, there was one Stephen Hubener, that gathered such great Riches, built such stately houses, and was so successefull that all admired. And at last falling sick, dyed, and was very honourably inter'd. But a short while after his death and buriall, his body (or that which is more likely, the Devill by his Diabolically power, carried about his body) did pinch many men with such strait embracements, that many of them died, yet diverse recovered again, who all with one consent confessed that they were thus clasp'd or beclipp'd by this rich man, in that very habit in which they had seen him alive, therefore the Magistrate of that place, that he might void or lay this Satyrical sight, commanded the body of that man to be digged out of the graves, after he had lain in the Earth twenty weeks, yet was not corrupted or rotten, but fat, as young and well fed. Besides use to be, the body was delivered to the Hangman, to be carried away to the place of execution, where he cut off his head with his Axe, and anatomizing him, took out his heart, and did cleave it; there issued out of his body blood, as if he had been alive (which-like) to sustain punishment, therefore the Hangman threw the body into the fire, a great company standing by, his head being bound to his feet, and so he tyed neck and heels.

132.

ABOUT two hundred years since, in Hammel, a Town in Germany, the Devill in the likenesse of a man walked about the streets of the City, playing many youthfull pranks, inriced many boyes and girls to him, and drawing them about the City gates unto a bordering mountain, he together with them vanished away: which when it was told to the Citizens, by a wench which was afar off, and secure, they with great care sought their children in the Rivers, woods, and all about the Country, but none ever knew why or how they were thus deprived of them. Which History is recorded in the Annals of that forementioned City, and is read by many Famous and illustrious men. Fincelinus, first book.

133.

ON a time the Devill made a great moan and complaint as though he was afflicted by some terrible pain, saying, he was the Soul of this and the other man, that he might delude men, there are very many Histories of this kind, and we have reckoned some before. Peter Mamurin saith, there was a thing happened about the River at Vienna in France, in some houses of Capland, in the year 1458. that the Devil did give out, he was the Soul of one deceas'd, filling all places with his sighs, clamours and lamentations, wishing he had some prayers made for him, and that pilgrimages might be undergone, and declaring very many other things, But, said one to him, If thou wouldest have us to believe thee; say, Have mercy on me O God according to thy great mercy in Christ: He made answer, he could not do so; then they that stood by mocked him, and he being fretted went away.

D Bartholomew Fayus writes, when Nicolas Alberis Perumen-fis, had prayers made at his Grand-fathers grave, there came out of the ground a man wrapped with a sheet, who spoke to a woman, and told her, he was her Grandfather; and, that he might be delivered from Purgatory, it was needfull, that they should sing Masse, and have a Progression into the house of the Virgin Mary; then uncovering himself, she saw he was her Grandfather; then she procured a great company of Masses to be said, but when she ceased from their celebration, she was grievously tormented, and at last he confessed that he was Beelzebub. But this story being blazed about all France, I shall say no more of it. But now see another new story which is well-known to the Citizens of Paris, also printed, which happened at Lutetia, at the sign of the Red Horse in the Street of St. Honoratim.

A certain man called Metaxarim, when he saw a Neece of his who was an Orphan, he took her home. Whilst she prayed at her father Gervase's grave, the Devill met her in the shape of a tall man of black colour, and taking her by the hand, said; Friend, do not fear, thy father and thy Mother are in a good place. But yet there should some Masses be said, and she should go a pilgrimage to our Queen and Lady of vertues, and so straightway they should go to Paradise, to the Virgin: She asking who he was; he gave this answer, That he was Satan, and admonished her least she should be afraid: the maid did what he commanded, which done, Satan had her take a pilgrimage to St. James. To whom she said, I cannot take such a long journey: from that time Satan gave not over importunately to urge her, and familiarly calling her, said, How cruell thou art; saying, she will not put her shears into her bosome for me, which when she had done so to satisfy him, that she might free her self from his importunity, he furthermore asked that she would give him somethings at the last proceeding, so far that he asked one of her hairs; she gave him one: sometimes he assayed to perswade her to drown her self, and at another time to strangle her self, and he putting a rope about her neck, had been choa-ked if she had not cryed out, and sometimes her Uncle desirous to defend her, was so beaten, he knew not by whom, that he lay sick above 15. dayes, and once the Evill spirit offered to lye with her and to offer violence to her chastity, but she strongly resisting, was so beaten with his stripes that the blood gushed out of her body in divers places. Amongst those that saw her, there was a certain Secretary of the Bishop of Valentia named Chosim, who told the maid that the best way to drive the Divell away, was, not to give answer to his words, although he bad her pray to God, which he never did, but after a blasphemous manner, or mocking that devotion, using it to created beings; the Devill seeing that the maid would not answer him, and that he could do no good of her in that case, took her and threw her upon the ground, and from that time she never saw him after. Bodin relates these things in his Treatise of Magickall Demon. Book 3. chap. 6.

Michael

135.

Michael Caroplates Rancapes Imp. had a certain maid that was his bond-servant, which at an Eclipse, or conjunction of the Moon with the Sun, was struck with Madnesse, and cryed to the Emperour, Descend, descend, and give place to others: this being often done, made the Emperour afraid, therefore taking counsell of his servant Theodatus Michael E. asked the wench that was mad, to what house of the Palatinate that might belong or concern, and by what signes and tokens he might know. When the maid was in her frantick fits and asked, she did intimate and signify the Armenian Lion namely, and described its marks and its fashion. But when she commanded Theodatus to come down from his Tower, she did Prophecy of two men which should meet him, whereof one of them sitting on a Mule should be he that should possesse and enjoy the Kingdome. Theodatus went to that appointed place, to search about the thing, and there knew the man by his token which the girl had before taught them, and so they perceived that she did not prophecy false, by reason that she was inspired by the Devill, by whom she was possessed. Cedrenus and Zonaras, tome 3.

136.

Erasmus Roterodamus in an Oration which he writ in the praise of Physick, saith, that he saw a Man, one Pbiliarus Paletanus by name, who being an Italian, and not at all skilled in the Dutch, yet perfectly did speak that language, as though he had been possessed by the Devill. Wherefore he was taken in hand by a famous Panacean Physitian, and giving him Physick, brought out of him a great sort of Worms, and so freed the man of his disease, and also deprived him of his German language. Cardan de Rer. var. Book 8. chap. 43.

137.

Norbertus at Nigella using exorcisms to dispossesse a certain maid that was possessed with the Devill, was derided by him, who did repeat the Canticles from one end to the other, in the mouth of the girl, and after did Interpret it in the Latine and German tongue; but at last a Bishop sharply withstanding him, he was expelled out of her in the year 1122. As the continuator of Sigebert hath it.

138.

In Italy there was a certain Virgin possessed by the Devill, and utterly ignorant of the Latine Tongue, and being asked by Lazarus Bonamicus, a Bononian Professour, which was the best Verse in Virgill, she answered, or rather the Devill out of her.

Disce iustitiam munus, & non temere deos.

Be warn'd to learn right, and obey the gods.

Manlius, first Book by the relation of Phil. Melancth.

139.

In a Wilderness of the Countrey of Tingut the voices of Devils and spirits are heard, who call those by their own names who are walking alone, or else wandering aside from their company, and teigns

feigns the voices of their companions, and so misleading them out of their way, he hurries them into destructions gulph; sometimes a consort of muscicall instruments are heard, but more often the noise of Drums. Munsters Cosmograph. Book 5.

T Here was a certain Citizen of Erbord that for some years together kept a Crow in his house, and when he saw any silent or sorrowfull, he used these words after a jesting manner; O my Crow, what makes thee so sad, what thinkest thou of? To which, beyond all expectation, the Crow, or the Devill in it, clearly, and with a lively voice, recited a Verse out of the 77. Psalm, I have thought of old, and I have had eternity in my mind, and thus the Devill spoke out of the Crow. Caspar Golden. in his Book of Miracles.

140.

H Jeronimus Cardanus told his Father that there appeared seven Spirits which did dispute with him about divers wonderfull things, and did enucleate and unmask hidden mysteries that were before unknown out of the Manuscript writings of Averroes, of Physicians principles.

141.

I N the reign of Trajan, a Crow, but rather the Devill out of the Crow, began to speak with humane voice, and cryed out of the Capirol in Greek, τα εδρα νεα, omnia bene se habebunt, i. e. All things shall be well; from whence came that distick of an unknown Author.

142.

*Tarpelo quondam confido culmine cornis,
Est bene non parum dicere; dixit Erit.*

Englished thus,

*A Chough did from Tarpela's top foretell;
Though things now are not, yet they shall be well.*

A Most certain argument to prove that those men are possessed, is, they speak those tongues which they never learn; Modus saith, there was one whose name was Samuel, being but twelve years of age in the Village of Wanilet ad Land, he was the Son of a Noble man, Lord of the Land, who was possessed of the Devill a Month after his Mothers death, and grievously vexed and buffeted, also the Devill had power over his body, and if any one would withdraw the body he did retract him again by violence, his father would not have him exorcised (for Religion's sake which he professed). And whether or no he was freed from it, the twelfth or thirteenth year he was past, in which the woman of Peruinus was possessed by an evill spirit, but she had an exorcism I know not, which History I passe over, because it was related in diverse books, which are now printed. Italy and Spain abounds with such demoniacal persons which had need be bound up in chains; these can speak speake Greek and Latine, and other tongues which they never learnt (or which is more likely, the Devill speaks in them): for if at any time that Woman of Vertunen had put out her tongue a great length, the spirit then spoke most Eloquently. Melandaban reports that he saw a woman in Saxony that was possessed, who could neither read nor write, yet did speak Greek and Latine, and Prophesie of that cruell war in Saxony, saying: Great misery shall come upon this Country, and a Famine upon this people. Fernelius, in his book of the secret causes of things, tells, that he saw a possessed Boy speaking Greek for all that he knew no letters. Hippocrates, in his Book De Sacra morbo, thought it to be the falling sicknesse, but some afterwards in Greek did accurately note the difference; For those who were possessed spoke divers languages, and prophesied, which could not be observed in those who had the falling sicknesse.

143.

144.

IN the reign of Argyropolis Emperour of Rome in the Thracian Province at the bottome of the Fountain of Curena, there was a miserable dolefull noise heard, mixed with howlings and lamentations not onely for once or twice, but continually dayes and nights from March to July. And when some came to see the place from whence the voice was heard, there was another howling thwarted them. I suppose this miracle did foretell the slaughter of the Romans in Cilicysia. Cedrenus.

145.

C Alliographus, a reverend man of Alexandria, going out of his house in the night time, at midnight he saw brazen statues speaking with a loud voice, that Mauritius the Emperour of Constantinople was slain, together with his children at Byzantium: going forth in the morning, he related it to Augustulus, who warned him not to tell it to any, and prescribing a day, in the ninth day, there came a Messenger declaring the death of Mauritius. Then Augustulus did publish to the people the Devills Prophecy. Paul. Diacon. Book 17. of Roman History; and Nicophorus, Book 18. Chap. 41.

146.

H Ircanus, 30. Captain of the Jews, and High Priest, when he had depured his two sons, Arifobulus and Antigonus to the siege of Samaria, and the Samaritans having implored help of Antiochus Cysicenus, it was reported that in the very same day in which his sons had entered battell with Cyzicenus, the High Priest being alone in the Temple, heard a voice that mentioned the new gotten victory of Antiochus by his sons, which he heard and by going forth published to the people, and a while after his Oracle came certainly to passe. Josephus Book 13. chap. 18.

147.

WHEN the Romans in a great battell with the Tarquintians fought a way Li Junius Brutus Consult, but in the following night, such an affrightment seized upon the Enemies. The Tarquintians and the Rojenes in silent troops returned home as conquer'd quer'd men. The report is, that in the next night after the battell out of the next wood (which Livy calls Arpa, and Dionysius said it was a Holy wood) a loud voice was heard whether it was the voice of a Faune or Silvine it could not be resolved, which happened more then once in the Hetrusian war, which prodigy did so affright the enemies that they yielded themselves as conquer'd. Sabellicus Book 7. Ennead 2. Valerius Book 1. chap. 8.

IN that day which Cesar fought with Pompey at Pharsalia, C. Cornelius of Patavina, being Augur, when he had taken augury, at the first sight suddenly turning to those that were by him; said, now the businesse is done, now the men begin their work, and trying his augury the second time, he with a loud voice cryed out; O Cesar, Thou overcomest, they that stood about him, admiring at the thing he took the Crown from off his head, and swore he would not put it on again untill the businesse made his art believed or credited. Livius and Plutarch in Cesar and Pliny, saith, there such a noise came when two armies were fighting one against the other to the augurs sitting on the Patavian Mountains, being bold to affirm by that, either the world would be dissolyed quickly, or Cesar was fighting with Pompey. Sabellicus Book 7. Ennead 6. out of the 15th Book of Gellius chap. 18.

148.

VHen Antonius fell from Domitius, and a great war was expected in Germany, the City being affrighted, and the people of themselves without any other author, disperfed the fame of the victory, and a report going throughout Rome that Antonius was killed, and that no part of his army was left alive, it was so really believed that a great part of the Magistrates sacrificed. But when the Author of the rumour was sought out, but none appeared; but the news was put off from one to another, every one clearing themselves of it, and being as it were labyrinthed, and plunged in a vast Ocean, they could not make it appear from what original or Fountain it proceeded, the fame of which quickly overspread the City. But a Messenger and letters meeting Domitian in his journey, leading out the Legions to war, intimating victory, so that one day was the day of Trophies and of Fame too, in places distant more then two thousand five hundred Miles. Plutarchus in Emilio.

149.

Sappho a woman of Alexandria, at a certain time being amongst her acquaintance, and a disputation arising about the Soul, she was wrapt by a certain fury suddenly, she seemed as though her voice was taken away, and was for a while dumb, by and by she began to cry out, My Cozen Philometor being transported in a Chariot, is now returned in a thorny place, and hath burst his elbow and his hands are wounded, and a certain man complaining, the thing was a while after known which confirmed the truth. Eranapius in Adesio.

150.

151.

Thamus an Egyptian Pilot, sayling to Rome late at night near the Echinad Islands, night being far spent, heard the voice of an unknown Authority which call'd him by his own name: they that were in the ship were all amazed, and when it called the third time he answered; then saith the voice, When thou comest into the next Island, the voice being heard as if it were on the foredeck. Thamus being astonished, and religiously given, obeyed its commands, and immediately after it had given its precepts, such howling, mourning, and lamentations was heard in the Ayre, that all thereabouts was almost dead with fear. The news quickly arrived at Rome, and Tiberius Caesar commanded Thamus to be brought before him, and examined, that he might know the truth of it; the Augures and High Priests consulting about it, they answered, Pana perhaps was born of Mercury and Penelope. Plutarch relates this in his book of Oracles, which Oracles then were made dumb, in which place although we may acknowledge the subtilty of Satan, and the Devill being busied about bringing the death of Christ into question, and to mock it by such a fiction, except he would by Pana's death inter that mens Souls after death should be destroyed, or annihilated.

152.

Monobazus the King of the Adiabeniens, his surname was Barles, being in love with Helen's sister, married her, and of her had Adonobazus, and other children of other wives. At the last lying with his wife big with child, and laying his hand upon his wives belly, he thought he heard a certain voice bidding him to take off his hand from her belly, lest he should oppresse her young; which as it was begun with divine providence, so it was likely to have a prosperous end. He was affrighted with this voice, and shewed the thing instantly to his wife, and he called the Son Isatch that was born at that birth; And by reason of this prediction he made him Heire to the Kingdome. But he together with his mother embracing the Jewish Religion, restored Artabanus the King, again to the Parthian Kingdome, and fortunately fought against the Arabs and Parthians in the 55. year of his age and 24. of his reign, he died and left the Kingdome to his Brother Monobazus. Ex Joseph. Book 26. chap. 27.

153.

Nicephorus Phaen the Emperour, did fortify the Palace of the Constantinopolitan Tower, in which it was foretold him that he should dye. At what time the walls of the Palace was builded, in the night season a certain man sailing on the Sea, cryed out after this manner: O Emperour, thou makest up thy walls, and although thou vassest them up to Heaven, whilst that which is within is evil, the City may be easily taken. He that spoke those things, was a long time and very much sought after, but never could be found out, the wall was finished, he perished that same day that he had the keyes delivered by him that had the business committed to him. Codrenus.

When

VVhen Opicinus Cacia Novaria, being very thoughtfull or Melancholly, walked alone in his route at noon-tide, he heard something call him by his name, but saw no Man, and afterwards said, wouldst thou be willing that thy Son should dye? To whom he answered, (having no time to consider of it) he would, but afterwards coming to himself, quickly denied that which he had assented to, and was very sorry for the cruelty of the prodigy; therefore within three dayes his son John Baptist having no more, fell sick, and two dayes after dyed. Fulgosus, Book 1. chap. 4.

154.

BEfore Nero's death, there was a confused murmure mixed with laughter, and a tumult in the Theater with great mourning was heard when no man was there. In Albania it rained blood; and both the dores of Mausolus (in which were the Tombs of the Cesars, he being the last of that stock) and the dores of his bed of their own accord flew open, out of which there was heard a voice calling Nero to him. Xiphilinus ex Dione.

155.

M. Antonius Majoragius reported that in the Moneth of Aprill there was heard, in Eupilus Lake, a sound, or voice crying after this sort, Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh; The first part of which had a Musicians song, the latter part of the voice had their brief, and in those years, nor in any other, were there ever a more plentifull encrease of Wine, Wheat, and other things. Cardane Book 15. chap. 85. de rerum Varietate.

156.

THere appeared to Hircanus the Captain of the Jews, and being also High Priest, a certain light, which enquired about his successour, being carefull of Aristobulus and Antigonus his eldest, which he loved above all their other brethren. But when God had shewed the picture of Alexander, the youngest sorrowfull that he should be successfull and prosperous in all his proceedings, commanded that he should be brought out of Galilee, lest he should be in any capacity of having the Kingdome after him, but the event made the Oracle be believed, for he was possessed of the Kingdome after Aristobulus who before had slain Antigonus, and killed the other brother that withstood him, but the other that was contented with a private life he honoured, Iosephus, Book 13. chap. 20.

157.

BEfore Camillus's banishment M. Cedicitius a vulgar person declared, or gave it out, that in the night before, he was called out of his way (which they call the new way) by a loud voice and looking back, and seeing no man, he heard a voice greater then a mans, which spake thus to him: Go to M. Cedicitius, and tell the Tribunitian Souldiers, betimes in the morning, they may expect the French within a few dayes. The Tribunes despised and laughed at those relations. A little after this came Camillus's distresse, and the Invasion of the French. Plutarch. in Camillo et Sabellicus, book 9. Ennead. 3.

158.

159. Leurgus hapned to come to Olympia, and was a spectator of the games there: it is reported that this befell him, viz. that there was a voice like the voice of a man behind him rebuking him and wondring at him why he did not stir up his Citizens to celebrate that solemnity, he turned himself about, and finding no man that spoke to him, then he was perswaded it was a divine voice, and gathered Pythius and his companions to himself, and made a great feast by which the solemnity became much more remarkable. Plutarchus in Lyeurgo.

160. Cassius Cherea, captain of the Guard, with some others, made a conspiracy against Caligula. And when he was going into the Court, he heard a voice from among the multitude, commanding him to perfect their designs, the Gods being their assistants. At first he suspected that their plot was betrayed by some of the Conspirators, but afterwards he perceived, that he was incited thereunto, either by some that knew it, or by an Oracle from God. On the 3d day therefore they slew Caius Circensis. Josephus, lib. 19, cap. 1.

161. Pertharus, King Arithperus his Son, who being banished by Grimoaldus, and in his banishment sailing into Britain, was warned by an unknown voice, that Grimoaldus being dead by Phlebotomy, he should seek for his fathers Kingdome. Whereat being moved, though he knew not the Authour, yet returning into Italy, within three Moneths after the death of Grimoaldus, he was made King of the Lombards. Platina in Dono.

162. C. Hofilius Mancinus the Consull, going into Spain, as he was taking Ship at Hercules his Haven, whither he went on foot, this sounded in his ears: Mancinus, stay. He being affrighted herewith, turned his journey, and went unto Genoa; and when he had there shipped himself, a huge great Snake appeared to him, and presently vanished out of sight. He being conquer'd by the Nemantes, yielded basely. Valerius Max. lib. 1. cap. 6.

163. Henry the third being Emperour, kept the Feast of Pentecost at the City Mentis in Almaine. Where arose a dissention between the servants of the Archbishop of Mogun, and the servants of Abbas Fuld, about their hire. They went from words to blows, and fighting with Swords, they polluted the Temple with mans blood. The Bishops running to them, brake off this bloody battle, and again purged the Temple. The tumult being afterwards pacified, when they sang, Thou hast made this day glorious. The Devill was heard to cry aloud through the Temple: I have made this day quarrelsome. The Emperour amazed at this strange noise, endeavoured to force away the Devill by giving many Alms, and he himself with his Nobles, distributed to the poor those dainties which were were provided for his own Court. Naclerus, Volumine 2. Generatione 36.

VHen (Rome being pillaged and undone by a home bred conspiracy) Constantine the Emperour had remained six years in Sicily, he died at Surogasa a City thereof, in a Bath called Daphne. For one Andreas went with him into the Bath, and killed the Emperour by throwing down a Vessel on his head as he was wiping him: Constantine his death was known in the City the same day he died by a voice coming forth out of the Ayre. Zonaras & Cedrenus.

164.

Bodid faith of Constantinus, who is accounted amongst the skillfullest workmen of the Mettal Art in France, and is the most famous in all the Kingdom. I have heard his comrades, when blowing a long time, no hope or likelihood of any good appeared, ask advice from the Devill, if they did right, and might accomplish what they desired: But he replied in one word, Travaillez, take the pains; the blowers being animated with this, blew so strongly that they brought all to nothing; and they would still have blown if Constantine had not told them this was the Devills usual custome, to answer doubtfully: But that word, Take the pains, imployed that Alchemy should be laid aside, and he should fall to some labour, and honest Art or science commodious to get a living: he is a mad man, that thinks Gold can so quickly be made, in making whereof nature spends more then a thousand years.

165.

ASouldier gave a Horse to his kinsman, that when he died, he should sell him, and give the Money to the poor. He sold the Horse and kept the Money to himself. Thirty dayes after, his Soul returning; (It was the Devill) saith, Thirty dayes have I bin tormented in Hell; but thou who gavest not to the poor what I had thee, shalt go thither to day, and I shall be translated from thence into Paradise. The very same day the Devills snatcht him away, and 12. dayes after his carcase was found in an exceeding high Mountain. Vincensius, lib. 24. cap. 8.

166.

Henor Boethius in his 8th Book of the Histories of Scot. relates; that in a small Village of Scotland scarce 14. Miles distant from Aberdene, there was a very beautifull young man made open complaint before the Governour of Aberdene, that he was many Months molested and troubled with a she Devill, (as they call it) the handsomest that ever he saw, and finally when the dores were shut she came to him by night, and by her fair speeches fore't him to embrace her: when 'twas almost day, she went away making no noise, and trying many wayes, he could by no means be freed from that so great and base vexation. A prudent and devout Bishop commands the young man immediately to go to some other place, and according 167.

according to the Christian Religion to conform himself to prayer, and fasting, more zealously then he used to do, hereby he thought the Devill would be put to flight from him, when he saw him so intent upon all good works. Upon this wholesome counsell followed good successe: Which when the youth had religiously performed, within few dayes after he was clearly delivered from these Hobboblins. So the He-Devill did no longer trouble the Woman of Neure, after her confession, and holy Communion which accompany prayer and fasting. Legitur in vita Dni Bernhards, Vicius, lib. 4. cap. 27.

168.

A Certain Maid in Burgus possest with Melancholly, acknowledged that she was haunted with Vergilius his Ghost, having for a long while conjured against it; which we may the more easily believe, because she was a plain girl, very sincere, and one who never went abroad; Conjuratation not at all prevailing, a Physician gave her at first some artificiall Medicines, then some others to strengthen her, and so she was restored. Vicius, lib. 4. c. 23. de praestigiis Daemonum.

169.

Philippus wesselich Colonienfis. A Monk of the Abbey called Knechtensstein an upright and pure person about the year 1550; was miserably and sundry wayes tortured by a Ghost, which brought back again the lean Abbot, dead many years before. Sometimes he was carried under the roof of the house, sometimes he was thrust between the rafters over the Bell, oftentimes he was on a sudden conveyed through the wall. On a time he was found, his body being laid over a pond, and his head lying upon the land. At the last, our comes the Ghost, relating the cause of his long and manifold trouble: to wit, that this was that Abbot Matthias Durensis, so many years buried, who tortured him because he had so exactly drawn, as 'twere to the life, the Virgin Maries picture, and had not answered the costs and labours of Novesium the Limner, who thereby suffered much damage. This was true. Hereupon he added the manner how he might be absolved, viz. that this crime could not be expiated, nor he by any means freed, unlesse for Religions sake this Phillip would travail into some parts of Germany (whom for his integrity the Devill thought to be a fit instrument for his sports) and three Masses were read to procure his liberty, viz. de Trinit. de Domin. and de Temp. The Divines of Colony consulted to satisfy his request, and the rest of the Monks desired the same of their Abbot Gerard Strailgen Morsens. who thought that Phillip was rather to be converted into another opinion by sounder doctrine, and sharp reproof, that relying on God the Father of all mercy with a lively Faith, and Christ our onely Saviour, he might stoutly condemn the impostures of the Devill, and tell that Ghost returning back, that he was not under his jurisdiction, that he lived under the rule of others, and therefore he could not observe his commands. Which being done, The Ghost replied:

replied: Tell the Deputy, for he hoped he would confirm his purpose. Whereupon the Abbot, when he perceived the Devill to persevere, and the Monk not confidently enough to resist his illusions, instructed him again, carefully admonishing him to repent, and not to be so prone to hearken to the sleights of the Devill: but if he continued to hear those spirits, as formerly, he threatened most severely to whip him, and heavily to beat him. Hereupon the Ghost seeing his endeavours to be vain, by reason of the Abbots constancy, and Phillips mind more elevated with trust in God against the fraudulent and destructive policies of the Devill, never came again, but went some where else. Vicem, Lib. 4. cap. 29.

A Nonim Surquetus Knight, of the most Noble order of the Garter, and likewise a Counsellour, left behind him a Son, which was base born, who afterwards married a wife at Brugis. This woman within a while after she was married, was lamentably tormented by an evill genius, insomuch that whithersoever she went, though in the midst of good and honest Matrons, she was snatcht out of their company, and hal'd out of one Chamber into another, and oftentimes conveyed away, sometimes into this hole, sometimes into that, notwithstanding all that were present did with all reluctancy and might endeavour to hold her fast: yet all this was without any great harm, or prejudice to her body. Every body believed, and were perswaded that this befell to her by a drab, that envied her Husband, with whom formerly she was in love withall, for he was indeed (as I may so say) another Narrissa. In this interim she was with child, nevertheless was she thus ill-handled. Her time of delivery being at hand, when there was but one onely woman with her, and she sent away the servant to call the Midwife, this Harlot seemed to come in unto her, and performed the Midwifes office for her. She for very grief and trouble of mind swooned away: when she came to her self, she felt that she was delivered of her burden: but the child appeared not; every body exceedingly wondering at it. But the day after, it happened that when she awaked, she found the Babe by her in the Bed, swaddled up, which she often suckled. But not long after, when she was asleep, the Infant was taken away from her, and never afterwards found. They said, (I know not what) Papers with Magick notes were found in the dore-lock. Historiam recenset Vicem, Lib. 2. cap. 48. de trasig. Demon.

170.

A Religious maid whose name was Judith, was by the Devill most cruelly writhed with Convulsion fits, and her jaws clasp together so, that she could not eat; her tongue also sometimes was so restrained that she could not speak, but made a most hideous and dreadfull noise. Idem, lib. 3. cap. 13.

171.

Acer.

172.

A Certain Country Priest living at Durweis, about Esweiler, did confidently promise, that he would set at quiet a pretty young maid named Helena, which was haunted with a Devill, in a Village called Loes, situated by Aldenborisa, some of his neighbouring Priests being convocated to this solemn sight; and strange wonder. At last the Devill told this Exorcist having for some while taken great pains to little or no purpose in disturbing him, that he must now desist, for about the glasse which was set to illustrate him, were many of his co-partners, which would confirm him. This poor Priest giving credence to this father of lies, goes about by the glasse to force them away, but when he perceived that he laboured in vain, being very angry, he brake out into this speech, If thou canst go out of one Christian into another, come forth out of her into me. To whom the Devill presently replied; What need I tempt him, whom at the last day I am certain, is my proper right to enjoy. Afterwards being desirous to know what the Devils opinion was concerning the Masse, Johannes Sartorius Parochus in Leons, ask him in plain English, Why this little maid instantly at the ringing of the Bell to Masse: was alwaies by him brought into the Temple. To this question he said, He could not presently make his answer, but he would consider on it. Actus hic celebratur, Anna 1559. circiter 17. Augusti. Vitem, lib. 4. cap. 21. de praestigis Dæmonum.

173.

The Nuns of Penitens shut up close in the County of Horn, were cruelly handled by an evil spirit. A poor woman in Lent time borrowed three Measures of Salt of the Virgins, and restored almost twice as much about Easter. Here in the bed-chamber were found small white balls, as were seeds pargetted over with Sugar, but being tasted, they were salt. In the same place they took notice of a Ghost walking there, and groaning, they heard also that many Virgins were called to arise, and to go with her to the fire, averring them, that she was not well. If at any time they took the Chamber-pot to make water, it was by force taken from them, and they watered their bed. Sometimes they were haled by the feet out of their beds, and were tickled at the Soles of their Feet, that with overmuch laughter they were ready to dye. Some had pieces of flesh pull'd off, many had their legs, arms, and Faces writhed the contrary way. Some were so tormented, though for fifty and odd days they eat nothing but Turnep Porrage without bread, yet they spued up such abundance of black stuffe, like Ink itself so sharp, that it took off the skin from their Mouth. Some were lifted up above a Mans height, and instantly thrown down again. When about 13. friends came to visit and comfort them that were sick, they fell down from the Table, not speaking a word nor sensible thereof; others lay as if they were dead with their legs and arms Crosse; one was lift up aloft, and although some standing by, strugled to save her with their hands, yet was she snatcht snatcht away above their heads, and thrown down headlong again. Some went upon their toes, as if they had no feet, or at least no use of them. They climb'd Trees also like Cats, and came down again from them without any alteration of their body. It happened likewise, that the Governesse of the Monastery (which they call the Mother) in her perambulation, as she was discoursing with Margaret, Countess of Buren, was hurt on her thigh; The wound was black and blue, but was healed again. This cruelty continued evidently full three years, which afterwards they concealed. Vide Vierum. lib. 3. cap. 9.

NOr unlike these, did the religious Virgins undergo at Colonie, when they were cloyster'd up in the Monastery called Nazareth; to whom yet this was added, That though they were for some years before many and sundry wayes troubled, vexed, and perplexed by the devil; yet in the sixty fourth year, beside other Spectrals often appearing in a terrible manner, they oftentimes fell flat downward, the lowest part of their body jogging up and down, as the manner is in the sports of Venus, their eyes being all the while shut, which afterwards they open'd to their shame, where being out of wind by their great pains taking, they took breath. One Gertrud gave a remedy to this disease, which in the 14th year of her age being included in a Monastery, merrily underwent these pastimes in her bed, though every night almost with a consecrated robe she endeavoured to chase away her Lover that lay with her. Which sport, when another Maid that lay in the next bed heard, she trembled all over, and was tortur'd with strange kinds of convulsions; sometimes in the fit she was blind, and though she seem'd to be in her wits, yet she uttered divers things lightly, and desperately. So did many more beside her. Thus this sore spread by little and little like an infection, most of all when they did not first take good counsel. This said Paramour wrote to her Sweet-Heart dreadful Letters, afterwards found by Johannes Vierus, making diligent search in the same Colledge. Anno 1562. 25 Mali. Vierus lib. 3. cap. 11. de prestig. Daemonum.

174.

A Virgin of a very noble Family, being very much grieved, that she could not obtain the consent of her Parents and Friends to marry a young Man of a mean Extract, whom she most passionately loved; as she was walking in much perplexity, for the averfness of her relations therein, the Devil, in the shape of her Lover, met her, and perswaded her to go to the Nunnery of St. Bridget near Xante. And being there, she ran mad, pranced about, bleated, roar'd, and at last was mounted up into the Ayre, and then strangled. This distemper grew as it were Epidemical, and infectious amongst the other Nuns; and at length, from one to another, it seized upon a Child of the Keeper of the prison, whom he caught twice as he descended, and so saved him. Vierus lib. 3. cap. 9.

175.

176.

THe Nunnes in Hesmant of Neognagu, for some years were haunted, by a spirit entering in the night-time into the dormitory or Bed-Chamber, as though he had a great company with him; he did seem to play most sweetly on the Harp, that he might allure the Nuns to dance, and then something like a dog leapt into the bed of one of them, whom they suspected therefore of unchastity. Plerus ibidem.

177.

I Have seen another honourable Colledge on the borders of the Colonsenian Province, where for the space of eight years, a Devil in the shape of a dog, ran all about in the day-time, lurking under the vestures of the religious Nuns, and did seem to shew by the outward motion of their garments, signs of unchaste actions. Idem lib. 3. cap. 9.

178.

THe Nunnes that were in the Kentorpien Monasterie near old Mark, in the Earldom of Marchland, near Hammon, were grievously tormented with strange Convulsion fits, they breathed out a very stinking breath in their fit, or a little after the assault of the same, which did come upon them sometimes once a day, sometimes oftner, and at some times troubled them many hours together; the Maids were very sensible of the coming of the Convulsion fits, and did often affirm afterwards, that they could discern those that stood by, one from another, and could hear; but because of the convulsion of the tongue, they could not so well speak; some were tortured less then others. But this was almost common amongst them all. That when one of them was tossed, the rest also should be laid into several beds, onely hearing a hurly-burly, that they might be vexed in the like miserable manner. The first that began to be tortured, was Anne Zemgan, who first complained of a pain of the left side, or the spleen, and was therefore thought to be troubled with the Falling-sickness, went to Ariola, who made her believe they were hurt by the Witchcraft of Elsa the Kamenian Woman, which afterwards was burned alive with her Mother. Hence the Devil got some strength, and did not onely begin to torment them with divers kinds of Convulsions, but also to provoke them to bite others, and one another, and that they might strike, and be born up, and cast down, without hurt, as feathers were, from whence they were supposed they had no power over themselves: And if they were withheld from beating or striking, their hearts ached; but if they were let alone, although they did hurt, strike, or bite themselves, yet they were sensible of no harm. And they thought it necessary, that each should tyrannize over their own bodies; And if at any time Anne did speak in her fit, she did it as though another did both breathe it in and out; but in the interim she understood what she spoke, but the speech being done, she utterly forgot all her former words; neither did she mind seriously any thing that was either good or evil, but was as it were in a Lethargy thargy, without sense, discretion, and judgment, or reason: If any religious man did speak to her, she seemed to be tortured by Satany but if at any time other women did talk to her about their feminine sports, she was wonderfully taken with them; when they were exorcized, there gushed out of their mouthes a great deal of blood; All the Virgins were so afflicted by the Spirit, were unequally tormented by him, as he were a Serpent, under the sole of their feet, which burnt them as if it were scalding water: And although they were diversly tormented, yet the stomach and nutrition did remain in them all alike. The Devil did speak often and much out of them that were the youngest, that were mad; to whom he appeared in a black form, in the shape of a black Cat, or Elfa Kamenfis, or of her mother, or brother; and it was sleightly believed, that they were so cruelly handled by them all; where in the the last place Anne did firmly purpose in her mind, not to return into the Monastery, where she was left by her Parents direction; and then she was not afflicted; But if at any time it chanced, that she had a Letter sent from the Abbateffe of that Monastery or Colledg, there was a great trembling and horroure that invaded her, and possessed her whole body, as though she were assaulted with the relapse of her former disease: but after she married a husband, without any sense of her disease or affliction. Pierus lib. 3. cap. 10. de prestigis Damon.

John Fernelius relates in his second Book of occult causes, That when a certain Man was travelling in Summer time, he was very dry in the night, and rising out of his dream, and being awakened, and finding no drink, he by chance carched hold on some evil thing which he met; and commanding it, he perceived that his jawes were shut together as though by a hand, and was like to have been strangled: and when he was thus besieged and beset with this spirit, he thought he saw in the dark a great black Dogg, and feared to be devoured by it; who afterwards being restored to his right wits again, did relate it all in order: Many judged, this man, by his pulse, and heat and roughness of his tongue, and by reason of too much watching, was meerly mad and distracted. The same Author reports, That there was another young man, of a Knights Family, for some few years by the shaking of his body, was judged to have the Convulsion fits; for sometimes he would so move and sling his left arm, only, sometimes his right, sometimes onely one finger, otherwhile a leg, and both at other times, and the trunk of his body with such swiftnesse, that being laid down, he could scarce be held in by four servants; But his head laid without being shaken or stir'd at all; and he had his tongue and speech free, and was in his right mind and senses; yea, in the height of his Convulsions, he was taken with it at least ten times every day, but was well in the intervals, but something worn out by pain. It might have been deemed truly the Falling-sickness, if it had brought madness and stupidity with it; there were the most skillfull Physicians consulted with about it, and they did think it was a Convulsion, near bordering on the Epilepsie, together with a malignant and venomous vapour that did bear against the back-bone, out of which the vapour came, which did flow into those nerves, which are sprigg'd from the back-bone into the joints all about, but not into the brain; this cause being taken for granted, that it might be removed, they ministred to him divers glysters and strong purgations of all sorts, and Cupping glasses were fastened to the roots of the nerves, nourishing things, oynments, plaisters, which first were for purgation, after for strengthening, to drive away this malignant and poysonous humours; these doing him little good, they procured him sweating in Baths and in washes, in the Juice of the Ebene Tree of Senegal, which did as little help him, because all of us stayed far from the knowledge of the truth; for being first taken with it, in the third moneth a certain devill, being the author of all this mischief, did betray himself with a voice, and in uncouth words and phrases, and sentences, as well Latin and Greek, although the afflicted party was ignorant of the Greek tongue; he did detect many secrets of Physicians, that he had circumvented them with much danger, and that they had by their fruitlesse Medicines almost choaked his body. And as often as the father came to visite his afflicted son, he going a great way out of sight, cryed out, Drive away this which is coming to him, or wrest the chain from his neck. For by this you may know, that the French Knights wore gold chains, in which the Image of St. Michael did hang; the subtile devill did feign, that he feared the Image of St. Michael, that he might more evidently deceive those that stood by: As though he feared the picture of any Saint, when he feared not Christ the expresse Image of God, whom he was bold to assault, yea, and to tempt. Furthermore, being asked, Who he was? or by what power he might be removed? he said, That he had many receptacles, within which he lay hid, and could quietly go to other.

179.

180.

THe Town of Schiltach in Germany the 14th of the Ides of April, (which day was the very Thursday before Easter, in the year of our Lord Christ, 1533.) was burned, being set on fire by a Witch, as Erasmus Roterdamus relates from the authority of Hebriens Glacanus; as also Cardanus in his 19th book de subtilitate. The Devil made a noise, and gave a hissing sign or watch-word from a certain place in one of the houses. The Officer of the Town thinking it to be a thief, went to search the place, but found nothing, nor any body; but presently in another and higher room, the same noise was heard; whether also the Officer went to catch the Thief (forsooth) but when he found no body there neither, but heard the same voyce upon the chimney-top it presently struck into his mind, that it was a Sprite; and he bid his servants be of good courage. There were presently two Priests sent for, who when they had used their skill in exorcisms, were thus answered; That he was a Devil.

vill

vil indeed. And when they asked him, What he did there? He said, he would burn the Town. And when the Priests threatened him, he told them, he valued not their threatnings, for one of them was Whoremaster, and they were both Thieves. Presently after he took a gale, with whom he had had familiarity for fourteen years, (when in the strictest she came to confession, and received the Eucharist every year once, and who had communicated but that very day,) and having carried her in the Apr, set her upon the very top of a chimney, and delivering her a pot, commanded her to turn it; which whilst she did, the Town was burned to the ground in no more than an hours space.

381

A Courtier of the Kings, in a Speech he made at Wilsberg in the year of 1538. concerning good and bad Angels, makes mention of a certain Maid possesed by the Devil, for whom when prayers were made in the Church, the Devil ceased his attempts, and made as if he had wholly lost her, that by this deceit he might make her away before publique prayers were made for her. For which as they had remitted their care of her, whilst she went to the River to wash her hands, she was drowned sooner than could be imagined.

181.

In the year, 1536, at Frankford at Neader, there was a Maid, being the daughter of Marcus the Fisherman, that was taken with a pain in the head, and by a phrensie, one Georgius the Kalisch, a Citizen, pitying her condition, took her into his house; at length, when she was possesed of the Devil, she did very wonderful feats, whatsoever she fingered, whether it was a cloth, any bodys breast, beard, head, she snatched at it, and afterwards she got the Coyn that was used in that Country, and forthwith throwing it into her mouth, she chewed and did eat it. And she did take away money which was held fast in their hands, at which they admired greatly. Sometimes of her own accord she offered the moneys unto them; she often did swallow Needles that she snatched up, and spake in the idiom and dialect of High Germany, which she was not used to, and also contrary to the propriety of her own language; neither was it easy to comprize in words, or in an enchiridion, what was prodigiously performed and acted by her. Wherefore they did enquire of Doctor Martin Luther, What was to be done to her in that condition? Who answered, That she was to be brought to hear godly Sermons, and there to be interceded for, with constant ardent prayers poured out to God: And they following Luther's counsel, brought her to Church, where publicly she did often contradict the Minister that was preaching the Word. But at the last, by the Divine grace, the prayers of the Church being heard, she was freed from Satan, and restored to health; neither did there any of that madness or demoniacal disease trouble her after, but was freed from the dominion of Satan; and whole both in body and mind, and after faithfully did serve the Citizens of Frankford.

182.

ford

ford: The most Prudent Senate of that Common-Wealth did command this Prodigy to be published, Anno 1538.

183. Anno 1559. not far from Joachims Valley, there was a Smith had a daughter excelled in modesty and honesty, being diligently conversant in exercises of Piety, (by Divine permission) she was set upon by Satan about Lent-time, oftentimes the devil took her, and threw her upon the ground, as if she had been vexed with the Falling-sickness; Which thing troubled her Parents so, that they sought counsel of them that prophesie of future things, by a Pythonick or divellish spirit. By reason of the wickednesse of her parents, the Devil afterwards boasted, that his power was so confirmed and increased: About Easter Satan began to speak in the Virgin with a humane voice, and often appeared in the form of a Cuckow, of a Crow, of Horner, and other Birds, and did imitate their voice in every respect; he spake divers wonderfull things in Virgin, which would be too great a work to mention them now; And there came a great concourse of people to the Maid; many strangers did come out of severall places to see this wonder, and heard Satan speaking out of the Virgin; whereupon many out of a holy zeal did provoke him by words, and undauntedly did hear him answering. In the mean time, the young woman patiently did endure the crosse, and joyned her prayers uncessantly with the prayers of the Church; and as often as she did call upon the Name of Christ, and requested to be freed from that evil one, by whom she was oppressed; by and by the Devil did rage upon her with more outrageous fury, her eyes were swelled, bunching out, her tongue was twined out of her mouth like as a limber twig, and was extended to the longitude of a mans hand; her head was withen and screwed unto her back, and in a sad and horrible manner Satan did torment her, there was not any intermission of her fits; If any had enquired how she did, or how the case stood with her, she answered, her affliction, as by her senses she perceived, seemed as though she even now were sticke in the bottom of a River to be drowned; but by the coming of Religious men, she deemed she was snatched out of the jaws of death. All the Neighbouring Priests and Preachers of the Gospel daily came to her, who talking with the Virgin, the Devil with great derision answered; And as often as there was any mention made of Christ, he did divert into some filthy and frothy fable. And being demanded, how he entred into her; answered, In a draught of Ale, in the form of a fly; for it was two years that he had vexed her, ere ever she came to a sound mind; her Parents going to a Witch, was the cause why the Devil had the more power over her. A certain Man, one Helias Huseh, singular for piety in that Country, did watch with the Virgin almost whole Nights, and by his prayers strive against Satan, upon whom he raged with opprobrious terms, and all the contumelies he could; and as often as he was about to come forth out of his house, the evil spirit foretold, saying, Behold, this sacrilegious legious Helias comes again to afflict me. This holy and godly man, by the power of Gods Word, did oppose him, and frequently using the Name of Jesus Christ, drove the Devil to new outrages, as the madnesse of a Daemoniack was heard afar off: Sometimes the Devil speaking to Helias, said, Ohe, dance with me, either go before, or follow, as thou pleasest. To which things Helias replied, Let thy Dance lead thee into the bottom of Hell. The Devil answered, Go thy waies, now thou shalt see dances. These words being uttered, he roared and bellowed, and by and by entring into a stove, he appeared in the shape of a Cat and Dogg; these with wonderful leaping did lead the Dance, and at last vanquished: He played many pranks of this kind: Two dayes after Trinity-Sunday the holy Priest did set upon the Devil again, enquiring of him by what means or power he had possessed her: by the command of God, saith he, from whom I am sent, that I might torment the body, but I cannot hurt her soul; that I might give notice to Men, that they should abstain from pride, usury, gluttony, and other sins of that nature: and although it be fore against my will to promulgate these things, yet I am commanded by God, and forced to do it. At the last day I know, that I shall have more souls then God himself will have. To which the Minister of the Word of Schlackwaldensis replied, Thou lyest, saith he, O sacrilegious Wretch, for if sinners shall repent, they shall have salvation; but the eternall God at the day of Judgment, will thrust thee and thy companions into Hell fire. Why didst thou banish thy self out of Heaven, when God had created thee a glorious Angel. My Seat was not fixed sure there, saith he, Thou mayest as well spare labour, for I am not ignorant how carefull thou wast for this Margaret, (so he called the Virgin, whose name was Anne) and at whilfonside made prayers publickly to God for her. I have done so, answered the Minister, and I will not give over to do so yet, untill we precipitate and cast thee headlong hence into hell by our prayers: these things said, he asked him, Was not thou also sent to afflict Job? What then, saith he? Oh that now I had the like power given, that I might scatter the pestilence. And this conflict did last near two hours: Amongst other things, the Minister said, Behold, thou that hast been the chiefest and beautifullest of creatures, and the vertex of the Creation, veils thy self under the ugly mask of a hog, or other unclean beast. O good Priest, answered the Devil, for often I am metamorphosed into a Hare, and am the daintiest dish for great Men, Wherefore going now from hence, the Priest asked him, whither he would go? Some few daies being past, the Pious Priest brought out the Maid, and there in a great Congregation of people they did pray to God, and praised him with Hymnes and Psalms, and as often as Jesus Christ was named, the Devil did rage with a bellowing and hideous noise, as though a ruine was threatened to seize on all things: These things performed, they went away. When the Maid was brought back from the Temple, the Devil roared with his voice as a warlike Trumpet, saying, Little doth it profit you to remove me from this place; for truly, eight of my companions shall now depart hence. At length, the Minister of the Word of Schlackenwaldensis, together with ten other Ministers were called: John Matthesius sent two Deacons out of the Valleys, and from morning untill noon, there was great zeal and study in the company, of praying, singing, and reading of the Scriptures; this done, they went to dinner: After they had dined, there came the Minister of the Gospel of Schlackenwaldensis, bringing with him the Governour of the Castle of Prague; there was present a great company of Men, with one accord singing praises to, and calling upon Jesus Christ, and with ardent zeal pouring out their supplications to God, that they might be heard; and then the Devil was cast out, and flew out of the window like a swarm of flies: But before he went out, he desired of the girl, that he might but remain in one part of her body, in the nail of her finger, and at the last, to be but in one hair; but every one of these was denied to him. Furthermore, being about to go out of her, he spoke after this sort; All ye contemners of the Word, Ministry, and Sacraments, all ye that are addicted to Urry and Gluttony, are mine body and Soul; and namely, he warned and admonished the Priest of Schlackenwaldensis, that he should call the Citizens that belonged to his Church, to repentance; for God thirsts after our salvation, and therefore the Devil was compelled even against his will, to warn men to repentance. When Satan was cast out, the Maid was carried into her father's house, and in her right mind, being refreshed in her Soul and body by the blood of Jesus Christ; and having her sound judgment and right wits again, she earnestly commended her self to the Ministers of the Church, to be remembered in their publique prayers. Einckeln, in his third Book of Miracles.

profit

184.

IN the Year 1567, in Travencow, a City of Bohemia, there was a certain Man, who did so gather up Riches, and erect famous Buildings, and was so fortunate in all his enterprises, that every one admired at him; at length he fell into a sickness, and dyed thereof, and was very honourably buried: But a little while after his death and burial, his body (or rather a Devill, who by his diabolical power carried his body all about) did clasp and embrace very many men so straitly, that many of them dyed; yet some of those recovered again, who all with one consent confessed, that they were thus beclipped and hugg'd by this rich man, being in the same habit that they had seen him when he was alive: Therefore the Governour of that place, that this Spectrum might be laid and repressed, commanded the body of that man to be digged up, and the grave opened; and although he had layn in the ground for the space of 20 weeks, yet he was not rotten, but was as fat and plump, as young and well nourished bodies use to be; the body was delivered to the hangman then, who carried it away unto the place where malefactors used to receive their punishment; he cut off his head with an ax, and when the body was wrapt up, he took out the heart heart and cut it in pieces, there gushed blood out of his body, just as though one alive had been to suffer condign punishment; therefore the hangman threw the body into the fire, being tyed head to feet, and burnt it, a great multitude of men standing by.

Cæsarius Colonienfis writes in his dialogue, of a Priest's daughter that was much tormented by a wicked spirit; and was mad; her father was counselled to do after this manner, That he should send his daughter beyond the River Rhene, and by that means the Devil departed from her; but he did so beat her father, that about three dayes after, he dyed.

185.

THere are, saith Bodinus, in Spain, Italy, and especially Germany, that are possessed with the Devil for ten or twenty years, that they cannot be driven away; so there were found some boyes of Amsterdam, in the year 1556, who were possessed 30 years, and the Devils could not be driven away by any Exorcism. That also was a sign that happened to those that are bewitched, because they did vomit saw-dust, small pieces of glasse, hair, needles, and other such things, which usually happened or befell to such that were enchanted or bewitched. It is recorded, That in the year 1554, by a Benedictine Monk of Rome, (whom Cardinal Gonsius, the Bishop of Paris had brought thither) 80 girles and women were possessed, and had exorcisms, but nothing could be done for six moneths. To one that asked the Devil, why he did so possess those miserable girles, he gave this answer, That he was sent from those Jews that took grievously, that those whose greatest part belonged to the Jewish Nation were baptized, which is belloved to be spoken by the Devil, because he supposed or thought Theatinus the Pope was about to die, to whom he was an enemy.

186.

John Pierius in his 9th book, and 14. chap. tells of a girl that was possessed, which he saw in Germany, and that the Devil gave this answer to an Exorcist, telling him, That there was need that the Maid should make a religious profession to Maribodorus, a Town in Germany, and at the third time falling upon her knees, and celebrating the Masse upon the Altar of St. Anne, she should be cured; so it came to passe, that the girl was freed, and foretold her of such a sign of her freedom to come toward the end of the Masse; This done, at the end of the Masse, the Maid and the Priest saw a white splendid Image, and then she was freed from the demoniacal spirit.

187.

THere was a Woman of Menilus Dammarinus, the Lady Rosse by name, who from the eighth year of her age, began to be bound by an evil spirit to a Tree, or to the foot of a bed, or to a manger in the stable, one hand tyed to another by a rope, or a hair of a mares tail, or with flax, and that with such swiftnesse, that in the twinkling of an eye the Devil would have done it, and vanish away. In the year 1552. the Virgin was brought to Paris, Doctor Picardus and other Divines spent all their Arts to free her, but nothing took effect. Hallerius Medicus a Physician, laughing at them, said, She was troubled with the disease Melancholly, but afterwards when he saw the wonder in a great multitude with his own eyes, and seeing the maiden standing between two or three women to cry out, and by and by to see her hands so bound as they could not be loosened, and that the hands had need to be cut, he acknowledged that it was the evil spirit. This appeared to no man, onely the Virgin beheld a white cloud when the spirit drew near to bind her. Sylvula, of Wonderfull Histories, and of Magicall and diabolicall Witchcrafts, and of divers of the Devills delusions.

188.

189.

A Pollonius being in India with the Brachman-Philosophers, reports that he saw very strange wonders; he said that these Philosophers at their pleasure could make it fair and foul weather, bring tempests, or make calms, and could prepare feasts with all the Vessels fitting for them (yea, he saith that they did it in his presence) when there was none to be seen, who make ready the banquet, or waited in setting on, and taking off the dishes. And moreover he said that when they pleased they could make earthquakes the same he affirmeth that he saw amongst the Gymnosophists in Aethiopia, who made the trees bend themselves to the ground, and speak. Eulogius ex Philostrato.

190.

THERE are divers Families in Africa which do by their voice onely bewitch those who they inconsiderately praise. Pliny 7th Book, cap. 2. ex Isigano, and Nymphrodaro, hence came the custom amongst us (which Aristotle, ap. scilicet Probl. 34. witnesseth) that being about to praise any thing, we make this Preface, lest our words should be to our detriment, as God shall save it. Gellius 9th Book, 4. chap. Isigano adds, that there are things of the same nature among the Triballians and Illyrians, who by their sight bewitch and kill some upon whom they look long, especially with angry eyes, yea one may perceive mischief in their eyes. And 'tis more remarkable that they have two Apples in each eye. Apollonides reported there were divers women in Scythia of this sort, which were called Tyches. And there are a kind of people in India called Thibians, and many others of the like nature, whose marks he saith are these, in one eye they have a double Pupilla, in the other the picture of a Horse, and moreover that they cannot sink, nor are burthened with any garments. Demon relates a sort of people called Pharnacians in Ethiopia, not much unlike to these, whose sweat brings rottenness to those bodies which they touch, and there are women which every where infect with their sight, having double eyes, or pupilla's in them. Cicero also is the Author of it, and Pliny in his 7. Book 2. chap. Nero, tells of a people of Scythia (who are the greatest enchanterers) that they Metamorphose themselves from men into Wolves. Hecataeus, in Book, 4.

Rhadus being first named Ophiusa, afterwards Telchines, in that the Telchines inhabited the Island, some call them Wizards, and say, that they are Inchanters, and that they sprinkle the water of Syx's lake upon living Creatures and plants, on purpose to destroy them; and as Diodorus saith, 9th book, 1st chap. they can cause clouds, showers of rain, hail, snow, and change their proper shapes when they will; See Strabo 14 book, 1st chap.

191.

IN the Ephesian Letters, there is mention made of those, who with wonderful facility, as by a divine inspiration, attained to what they desired; for they report at Ephesus, there are divers Nores, and magical voices, by the using of which they are victorious in every business, as Diogenianus, Eustachius reports by those Letters, That there were divers words like to riddles, having no coherence, written in the sect, girdle, and crown of Diana. Suidas adds, In the Olympian games, there was one Milesius set in the Ephesian wrestling-Ring, and was able to do nothing in the conflict, because that Ephesus had some Ephesian characters written on his ankle. When being together, was marked, the letters being taken away, and Ephesus that had tyed out thirty, now laid down himself, vide Erasmus adagies. But that there were many of the Ephesians that were conjurers, may be gathered out of, that many of them were converted by the Apostles Sermons, and burnt their magical Books, being of great value; for the Devils power was great in that place, because the Idol of Diana was set up there, Act. 19.

192.

VW Hen the Goths were travelled out of Scandinavia, they marched to Scythia; Philimer their King did retain many of their magical Women in prison, as Jordan Gothic writes in that history; which sort of women, the King accounted most pernicious, and by his proclamation banished them into Wildernesses, lest they should kill the Souldiers by poisons, or weaken their strength, being driven away for a long while, they wandered about the Woods incessantly, committing themselves unto the Embracements of their Incubus spirits; from hence they report, that the Huns, a cruel generation of men came, which used no humane language, but a certain Image of speech, Boisfinus second Book, Dec. 11.

193.

THe Northern Botanici, Zappi, and Finnoes, are excellent Magicians; also the Biarms, who live under the Pole, they assume what shape they will; also they know what is done in the other World by their friends or enemies, Olav book 1. chap. 1. and book 2. chap. 18.

194.

195.

It is reported, that Zoroastres, the King of the Medians, found out the Art of Magick, and hath written a hundred thousand of verses upon them (as Pliny witnesseth); Some would have this King to be Misraim the son of Cham, others say he was not so; he flourished above eight hundred years before the Trojan War, which was in Abraham's time; But he, as we read in Clement's Itinerary, being willing to contemplate God, and much given to Astronomy, and minding the Stars, did strike out some sparks out of the Stars, that the rude multitude might be astonished at the miracle. At the last, being angry at that spirit which he often did frequent, amongst a great company of his disciples, as though he were a friend of the gods, was hurried away to Heaven in a chariot of lightning. Wherefore his name after his death, was Zoroastres, as much as to say, A living Star; he lived in the time of King Ninus, with whom he fought, and foretold when he was dying, that if they should keep his ashes, their Kingdom should not be destroyed. Swiss.

196.

The report went, that Perfes and Meda, two brethren, ruled both at one time; this in Pontus, the other in Taurica, both of them being of a truculent and savage disposition; Hecate sprung from Perfes, nothing inferior in cruelty and immanity to her father; which while she was a Virgin, used to shoot darts (as the custome was then); But her greater study was to make poysons; some attribute the invention of Henbane to her, and was accustomed to experience the nature and strength of poisons upon strangers; within a short space she attempted to kill her father by her poyson, and thereby unravell'd the clew of his life, by whose death she got the Kingdom; at Taurica she erected a Temple to Proserpine, at whose Altar she offered, strangers, whithersoever they came, from Sea or by Land, she did enact, that they should be sacrificed, and by this means she thought her fame would be spread in all Countries. Afterwards she married her Uncle, unto whom she brought forth Circes, Medea, and Aglaia; Circes was instructed in her mother's Art, and she did use the herball and poisons; She added other things by her own invention: The Virgin was married to the King of the Sarmatians, and by her enchantments kill'd the King, and was possessed of the Kingdom; whom because for a time she did tyrannically abuse, and cruelly handle the Nations that were under her, they expelled the Kingdom. After which, she with a small company of Women, was reported to keep a deserted Island in the Ocean; but the likeliest report is, that she came into Italy, and rested in the Larian Promontory; then that Island from her inhabiting there, got the name of Isle of Circe. Meda disdained not domesticall Arts, yet endeavoured to know the medicinall use of herbs, and to be skill'd in the dialect and number of magical verses, but was of a far milder disposition, then either her Mother or Sister were, (who were infamous for their truculency and and cruelty) as well with much art as favour, which she had much with her father: She freed strangers destined for slaughter. At length being suspected by her father, she flew to the Temple of the Sun placed on the Sea-shore: the Argonauts coming by night from Taurica into Pontus, shewed the cause of their coming unto Medea, she did tell them of the imminent danger that was likely to befall them from her father, and told them of his cruelty to strangers, admonished them to beware and take heed: Counsel being taken, Medea promised to get a helper, to bring to perfection the proposed combage: She did engage her self by oath to Jason, to be his Wife, as long as she lived. Then the Argonauts by night leaving their keepers in the Temple, went with Medea to get the Golden Fleece, and by her Arts make Ason, Jason's father, being an old man, turn young again, and delivered Polix, Jason's Uncle, from being slain by his daughters, and lived ten years with Jason at Corinth. But when she saw Glaucon or Creusa, the daughter of Creon the Corinthians King, to be preferred before her, she covering her anger, sent a coat, being poisoned, to the new married Princess for a Present; as soon as she had put it on, she suddenly burned like fire, and by the like destruction, Creon and his Queen perished: She openly slew the sons which she had by Jason, Jason dyed for grief, she flew to the Thebans, there she cured Hercules of his madness, and from thence being heaved into the Ayr by Dragons, she flew to Athens, and married Egeu, &c. Thus saith Diodorus, book 4. chap. 3. Ovid 7. Metamorph. & Sabellus.

Pasce farthing, is a proverb. Pasce is of a soft nature, and by Magicke has overcome all mortals; so that by enchantments they prepared a sumptuous supper, and servitors; she had a farthing minted or made by her, with which she could buy what she would of them that sold anything, and would give it them, and when she pleased it would come to her again; Suidas Appian the Grammarian remembers her likewise.

MAny think, that Pythagoras was a Magician, and skilled in those divellish Arts; for when he had by his magicall whispering, bewitched an Eagle that flew mustering over him, he brought it to him that he might make it tame, and forthwith it was made gentle. Pythagoras, saith Ammarus, shewed his golden thigh at the Olympick games, and used to talk with an Eagle.

Simon Samaritanus, as Ambrosius in Hexameron, and Clement Pontifex high Priest resyde, in his Itinerary, besides his various and wonderfull Arts by which he contended with the Apostle, he often appeared, sometimes in one shape, sometimes in another, and was seen to soar aloft with wings like a bird, a great way, therefore being horn up by his magical Arts, and by the Devils help, he did to extremely mock and bewitch the Romans, that oft-times he made made himself a god; and they made a Statue between the two bridges, superscribing this title, To Simon, the holy God; he bragg'd, that by many unspeakable conjurations, he could call up the ghost of an innocent boy to assist him, and by that he could make it to do whatsoever he commanded to be done: for the truth is, he was familiar with the Devil, which he called the soul of the boy, that he might cautiously cover the presence of his divinity. Vierus book 1. chap. 16. rx Clem. lib. 3. Recog.

197.

198.

199.

200.

THere was a certain Man in Galeotide, that by his words could drive away diseases, and could expell unreasonable weather, and barrenness, and poverty, with his sacrifices, and cause migrations, and give reasons for getting Riches; they report, that he was inticed into Creet, by the rewards of Minos, that he might find out that strange death of Glaucus. Suidas.

201.

A*Polanius Tyanen* the Philosopher, the son of Apollonius, his mother being big with child, saw the Devil standing by her, who said, he was him whom she carried in her womb viz. Egyptian Proteus; hence he was accounted the son of Proteus; he flourished under Claudius, Gains, and Nero, untill Nero's reign; in which he dyed; he was silent for five years after the Pythagorean manner; afterwards he went into Egypt, thence to Babylon to the Magicians, from thence he went to the Arabians; and out of all these places he gathered notable delusions; Suidas Philostatus has written his life: cunning Satan, by the deceits of this Impostor, would have brought the Miracles of Christ into question, and would oppose him as his Antagonist; Of which Magnus Augustinus the Bishop of Theopolis thus writes: In some places unto this day, the acts of Apollonius stands, and has their efficacy, some of them good for the driving evil spirits from health; others to restrain the inordinate excessions of the mind, and to expell those things which enslave men; neither did the Devil do such and such things when he was alive, but also when he was dead, and went along with him to his tomb; and by his name only did great wonders, to deceive poor ignorant men, which easily after this manner are deceived. What shall I say of the magick of Marathon, who was so expert and artificiall in these diabolish arts, that he openly derided and laughed at Apollonius, as not being right instructed in his mystery; for, saith he, he ought by his meer words to do what he pleases; (as I do) not to use any operations or means to it. Cedrenus in his historical Compendium.

202.

S*edecius* a Jewish Physician, made magical places before the Emperour Ludovicus, and other Princes; he devoted men, together with their horses and arms, and gulphed up a load of Hay, with horses and Cart and all; he cut off the head and feet of divers men, & did put them with their blood into a basin, he flow through the Ayr, hallowing like a hater, and the like pranks he played, ed, Chronicon Hirsingense; and at last he killed Charles Calvus (or the bald) the King with poison.

IT is reported in the family of the Earls of the Andegavensium, from whence Henry the second, King of England, sprung; there was a Princess, a notable Maga and a Witch, who was constrained to worship and reverence the Eucharist, who suddenly flew out of the windows of the Temple, and was never heard of after. Polydor 13. book.

A Certain Woman of Mediolensis, near the Cornissem gate, strangled a boy and devoured him; and when she was wracked for her cruelty, she said, She was perswaded by the infernal gods, that if she had sacrificed a boy three or four times, she might do whatsoever she would; Therefore she was bitterly tormented, being laid upon the wheels crosse or latticewise, and so her bones were broken, and she dyed acruel and lingering death. Arianus history, Mediolan 1. Sect. writes, that in his time this happened.

John Fernelius relates in his first Book of Occult causes, that he saw a certain man, who by the strength of his words could cause divers sights to be in a glasse, and those things which he commanded either in writing or in expresse Images, were so lively imprinted, that they might quickly and easily be discerned by those that fate by, yea, and there were holy words heard, but firrhly belgartered with obscene terms; and after this sort they call upon the powers of the Elements, and strange uncouth names of the Princes of the East, West, North, and South, Parus book 21 chap. 7. of the Devils deceits.

FAcus Cardanus, the Father of Jeremy Cardanus, as he said, had an aeriell devill to be his familiar for a long time, who a long while used Conjuratiō, and it gave him true answers, but when he had shaken it off, it returned him false answers, he was eight and twenty years a Conjuror, but he was freed from his familiar about five years, but whilst he retained the spirit, it was very profitable to him, neither did it alwayes come alone (although for the most part it did) but sometimes it came with its companions, Cardanus, of the variety of things, 16. Book chap. 39.

James Jadec de rase Comtensis, carried a Ring about with him in which he thought the Devill wasseyed by enchantment, and he did speak for five dayes together at the least, and did consult with it about strange things, and diseases, and the manner of curing them. At the last being bound and constrained to banishment, fitt his ring in a publique place, and a great company looking on, was hauled and broken in pieces with the beating of an Iron hammer by the Chancellor Dore, on Arthembus, 14. July, in the year year 1548. Vierus, Book 3. chap. 1. of the delusions of Devils.

108.

IN the year of our Lord 1546. The daughter of John Pernerus a Citizen of Esslingen whose name was Margaret, was so swelled by the pains of her belly, that the biggness of her belly almost clouded her face, and did seem to be ten palms in circumference; she said that there were creatures of divers sorts was fed in her belly, when in the mean time she feigned to be recreated, and refreshed by sweet odours and delicate sauces, those that stood about her Bed, heard a crowing of Cocks, cackling of Hens, a gagling of Geese, barking of Dogs, bleating of Sheep, grunting of Hogs, lowing of Cattle, and neighing of Horses. There came out of her side worms and Serpents of a wonderfull bignesse, about a hundred and sixty. Many Physicians and Surgeons were enquired of, and amongst them Leo-bartus Fuchs Tubingen archiater. At length came the Physicians of Charles the 3th Emperour, and Ferdinand, and the Hungarian King, accompanied by some of the Nobles, neither found they any thing false or counterfeit. When the disease had almost endured for the space of four years, and her pains did seem to encrease more and more, the Magistrate of Esslingen sent his Physician, together with three Surgeons, and a Nurse, that they might open the belly of the maid: they ryed her with thangs, they found her belly finely moulded up as with hands very artificially stuffed with pillows, with divers arches, by which the roundnesse of her belly was expressed: the Virgin being uncovered, had a very beautifull body, her belly was brought into Court, and reserved in the place of Anathemism. The Mother of this daughter was a Witch, and being examined upon the rack confessed that by Satans counsell, and for gain she had done thus, and her neck being first broken, she was publickly burned, and the daughter having holes bored thorow her knees with a hot Iron was condemned to perpetual imprisonment. Eycostener, in his prodigia.

289.

IN Crest there was one Moses that went about almost a whole year stirring up the Jews being about to draw them through the Sea, no otherwise than Moses of old performed. Those Jews gathered up all that they could. At the appointed day, he drew forth the miserable people, a great multitude of men and Women going with him, the false Prophet brought them unto a steep place, and there sheweth them a promemory unto the Sea, and perswaded them to leap into the Ocean that they might swim to him being on the other side. And afterwards he promised that they should have a safe journey: Most of them leapt in, being bewitched by his large promises, but some were drowned, and perished in the waters, others were drawn out of the waves by Fishermen coming that way by chance; but many of them followed him, excepting those that narrowly narrowly escaped, who returned to the rest of their company, and did tell of the danger and destruction that others suffered. In the mean while when these things were transacted, the false Prophet vanished; therefore they were not much out of their way, who judged him to be an evil spirit, who by Gods permission did delude that pitiful multitude and destroyed many. Isaiah. 7. Book 38. chap. 1.

Askani the chief of the Indian Wisemen being instructed by Apollonius, did tell his name, Parents, manners, and whatsoever happened to him, as if he had been present at all. Philostrophus.

210.

Vhen the Antiochian desired of Apollonius that he would turn away the Earthquake by which they were afflicted, saying, he was thus in his Tablets. See the City, because thou shalt be levelled even with the ground by many Earthquakes, and the River of Orontes shall wash thee to its banks Cedreus.

211.

Jamblicus returned from his sacrifices into City talking with his Schollers, and by and by falling his eyes a while upon the ground, saith he, Let us go hence, because not far from hence lies a dead corpse. Some of his Schollers followed him. But others, amongst whom Edesius, going forward in their journey, they met the Corpse who had buried the dead carter after Isidorus.

212.

Conquer the King of Norwega had so much skill in the art of Divination, that he could foresee whatsoever was attempted against him in Sarmy, which was above a hundred English miles off. Olaus Magnus, Book 3. chap. 13.

213.

It is related that the Magicians, by no less vindicate addictions, but by a fiction, at a young girl being chaunt through a Frog gurg, and fastned by the Husband in his Wives flower, then it will cause his Wife to loath adultery, and be affected by its irksomenesse, which they also for granted. Not much unlike that which Aspidochelone in the Phasian River at Colchis shore is a Mushroom, whose branch being lopped off by a maid, cast into his wifes bed, will cause her not to love any other man. Isidore, book 4. chap. 1.

214.

Philomete began to fall in love with Sophatrus Asiaticus Widow, a most beautiful and prudent Woman, he was her Cozen, who in this magic enjoy, her most Magical Vertue. A great Sophist by God name in Religion Rites, made her that she should not be married to him. *Isidore, in Edesius.*

215.

216. C Rata Regneri the wife of a Dane, a Champion, being a Witch who made a scaft of three Wood-Snakes, not hurtfull to the body, nor destructive to the mind, she offered the white part of the melle made of the white Serpent, to Erius her step-child, but the black part distinguish'd by red marks, made of the two other, she tendred to her Son Rollerus. Erius tasting of the melle to his preservation, being a courteous Man, turned the platter from one side to the other, saying, Thus as it wonten to be in a story, to be cast from the hinder deck to the fore-deck, but afterwards he did eat, and obtained the knowledge of all things, in an admirable manner so that he could understand the language of birds and beasts. Crata knowing her errour, when she saw the inevitable providence of fate, she began onely to commend her Son Rollerus that he might suffer the fruit of that happy birth by that kind of meat to flow to his brother: This is that Erius that deserved the name of Eloquent, and at the last he obtained the Kingdome. John Saxa Grammaticus, Book 5. of the History of the Danes.

217. S Scorus Scribus, under Manuel Comnenus the Emperour, did bewitch a Virgin by a Persian Apple sent to her by a Bawd, and drew her into his love. Nicetas, 4th book of Histories.

218. C Alamu, the son of Simon, who ruled over the Mulgarses, was so expert in Magick, that as oft as he pleased he could turn himself into a Wolf, or any wild beast. Sigebert, in his Chronicle.

219. Some Italian women taking some kind of meats, will so lethargize mens minds, that they may seem those things to them, as they are not: St. Austin hath recorded, that he heard this of Presbians, and said, that Presbians reported, that his father was made mad by such kind of enchanted meats as these women made, and quickly fell into a great sleep, and for many dayes together could nor be made awake by any medicine: And he told, That in that time he had the picture of a horse, and alwayes bore corn: and he further added the time that he carried it, the place, and the manner how. The truth of which things being afterwards enquired after, he saith, That it was found out, that a horse of that colour, which his father Presbians did speak of, and in that place carrying corn, to which he said, That it was a wonderfull thing, that women by their magical art, by giving meats, could make men think to do that to one being awake, to another being asleep, which without doubt there was no such thing: from whence in my judgment, that which is said of one time of the Strigilian Women, is nothing else but a magical dream; although to others it may seem otherwise. Peradventure those metamorphosings which were caused by Circet, were like to these, although they give another account of an allegorical sense for them. The same was shewed in an Egyptian Maid, when she was transformed into a Mare; they brought her to St. Hillarion, who presently turned her into her former shape. To which the like may be said of a young man, who by magical women seemed to be turned into an Ass, of whom, when Peter Damianus did accurately dispute before Leo the high Priest, he affirmed, it was the effect of Magick, and no fiction. Fulgosus book 8. chap. 11.

Egyptian

IN Prussia, Livania, and Lithuania, there is a great number of Witches, who at Christmas before night, laying the picture of a man in a certain place, they assume the Wols face, and go to the Countrey-mens houses in the Woods, and there fight, and drink off hogs-heads of Ale, kill cattel, and afterwards they count that place of the inhabitants divine; And if at any time there happen any mischief, as a Wagon overthrown and cast into the Snow, they believe, that he that it belongs to, shall dye that year; as they have found many times by sad experience. Within Lithuania, Samogetia, and Curia, there is a certain stone-wall standing, being the ruines of a certain Castle: At this, at an appointed time there meets 1000 of Wolves, and tryes their nimbleness in leaping, and they that cannot leap over this wall, (as those that are fat often cannot) they are beaten by their chief Governours: And in the last place, it is constantly affirmed, that in this multitude there are the great Peers, and many of their Nobility. Quintus illustrates it by many Examples, lib. 8. cap. 45. &c. He affirms, That the Duke of Prussia did give no credit to such Witchcrafts, but caused a certain man, not much skilled in Negromancy, to be imprisoned, till he should metamorphose himself into a Wolf; but when he saw he could not, he caused him to be burnt.

URATISLAUS, Prince of Lusatia, who first founded Bratislava, was bred against Graxoniuss Prince of Bohemia, his Nephew. They say there was a woman there, that foretold her son in Law, that with'd for the fight, that Bratislaus should be killed in the battle, and the major part of the people should dye with him; but he being but a youth, might peradventure escape, if he would be advised by her. She charg'd the young man, (that said he would do whatever she commanded) to kill the first he met withall, and to keep close both his ears in his pocket; presently making sterp with his sword on the ground, between his horse's forefeet, and kitting it, he got upon his horse, and hastened away. Bratislaus being slain in the Camp, called Thufur, the young man, that hearkened to his Mother in law, fled home safe, but found his Wife, which he intirely loved, killed, without ears, and holes made in her breast. Thus those ears which he had cut off from his enemy, in great amaze, he knew to be his Wife. Enen Silu. in Hist. Bohemia.

222. Apo'lonius Thyaneus cured the blind, the lame, and those that were tormented with unclean spirits; he delivered the City Ephesus, that was infected with a grievous Plague, by shewing them an old beggar, which he commanded should be stoned by the people, who afterwards taking away the heap of stones, was found in the shape of a dog, whom himself affirmed to be a Devil.

223. SOME Examples of them, who by magicall enchantments continued to the end in torments, recitat. Vicrus lib. 4. cap. 10. de Dæmonum prestigiis.

224. Duffus, King of the Scots, was sick of an unknown disease; in the night he sweat very much, and in the day-time being more at ease, he took his rest. His body, like to one in a Consumption, was pined away with a lingering disease. His pulse was as before, when he was in health, likewise his senses and appetite to meat; His Physitians were in despair of his recovery. In the interim, about that time arose a rumour, not known by what Author, That the King was poysoned by women, and that they in a Town of Moravia did practise the black art to destroy the King. Messengers were sent to make peace between Duffus the King, and the Inhabitants of Moravia, and being by night admitted into the Castle, are warned of the whole businesse by a Souldier, who searcht out the whole matter from his strumpet, whose Mother was one of the Witches that poyson'd him. Breaking therefore into their houses, they found one of the haggas having an image of wax representing King Duffus, which was made by their hellish art, fastned on a wooden spit before an hot scorching fire; another was found muttering a charm, as he poured forth liquor on the statue by little and little. They being cast into prison, and questioned about the Impiety, they made answer, Whilst the image at the fire was scorching, King Duffus was in a sweat, but reciting the charm, he should be alwayes awake, and at the melting of the wax, he should waste away, but it being utterly consumed, the King should instantly die. They were hired to do this wicked act by the chief Governours of Moravia. When the women were burnt, Duffus gave over sweating, and was restored to his health. Hæstor Boethus lib. 11. Historie Scythorum.

225. Vislof, chief Ruler of the Helsingians did so deprive those of which eye-sight whom he pleased, that they neither could see houses, that were nigh unto them, nor certainly to go unto them, he knew so well how to dimme their eyes with a cloudy mist. Olaus lib. 3. cap. 17. Septentrional.

THe Lappones and Finni in the Northern parts use to make short artificial javellins of lead, the length of ones finger, these they shoot at a distance towards them which they wish to be revenged of; who having a canker arising on their leg or arm, are with extremity of pain dead within 3. dayes after. Idem, ibidem. 226.

VHen Isabell, King Alphonsus the 11th his daughter, was given in marriage to Johannes Galeacim, Governour of the City Millain; Ludovicus Sfortia seeing her, his affection was so ardent towards her, that he desired her father to bestow her upon him to be his Wife; and on this manner he by his magick art brought it about, that Johannes Galeacius for many moneths was uncapable to perform the conjugall mysteries. Guicciardinus lib. I. 227.

Pythagoras on a time was seen at Criton and Metapontus on the same day and hour. Apollonius in Mirabil. historiis. 228.

Apollonius Tyanem being kept in publique custody at the Palace, and accused by Domitianus, vanished clear away out of his sight, and was the same day found at Puteoli, whither he had sent his Comrade before, and charged him to wait for his coming thither. When this same man had a book in his hand at Tigilla, wherein his accusation was included, he did miraculously and strangely cause, that this book being open, could in no place be found written. Philostratus. 229.

Jamblicus, a Philosopher of Syria, as he was praying, was lifted aloft from the ground more then ten cubits, his body and vesture was changed into the colour of gold. Prayer being ended, he came again to his former effigies, and fell down to the ground; viz. these were the illusions of Magick contemplations. Eunapius, in ejm vita. 230.

It is reported by Olaus in his History of the Northern folks, That Odda Danius, a grand Pyrate, rovd up and down the deep Sea, without the help of a Ship, and did often, having enchanted a storm, overthrow his enemies Shippings, and was at last (being environ'd by an enemy of greater skill) drowned in a gulph, who by his flight and cunning charms, did in former times use to dance on the top of the waters. 231.

233.

Othnius the Magitian brought Hadingus King of Denmark to his own again, when he was most sadly deluded by the tricks of the Devil and Magicians, and far separated from his company, on horseback over a great part of the Sea, and Hadingus thorow some flits of his rocket under which he lay trembling, palpably saw his horse feet tread the waves, to his great admiration. Olaus lib. 3. cap. 19.

234.

Thespion, the General of the Gymnosophists in Ethiopia, by his incantations enjoy'd an Elm Tree, that it should salute Apollonius, which the Tree did, with a very distinct voyce indeed, but something like a womans. Philostratus in vita Apollonii & Volastrianus, lib. 13. c. 8. Anthropol.

235.

Theotecnus the Magitian under Maximinus, by the power of magick made the Image of Jupiter to utter Oracles, by which the Citizens were incited to persecute the Christians, and the Emperour was much efferted and exasperated against them. At last, Licinius having found out his tricks, punished him severely. Eusebius lib. 9. cap. 3. & 11.

236.

The Grammarian Apion, with the herb Cynocphalea (which in Egypt is called Ostrites, and prevails against all manner of Witchcrafts, but whosoever gathers it, dies presently) raised the ghost of Homer, that he might know of what Country and Parents he was descended. But never durst tell what answer he received. Plin. lib. 26. cap. 2.

237.

Apollonius Tyaneus coming to the Tomb of Achilles, aver'd that the Ghost of Achilles in his old and known likeness and posture presented itself before him, and that thereupon the Sepulchre did a little tremble or move, and presently a young man appeared, as first about five cubits high, but in a short time he became twelve in stature, and seemed handsomer than can be imagined. The youth ask't him some strivious questions, and when he began to be somewhat too wanton and obscene, Apollonius perceived he was imployed by the Devill. He therefore forc't the Devill to depart, and when he was gone, a certain statue hard by in the likeness of the said youth, fell to the ground. Philostratus.

238.

Jamblicus the Philosopher, together with his Schollars, went to Gadara to certain Baths, the best in all Syria, (or the Roman Empire) except onely those of Babylon, to which no Baths could be compared: whilst they were washing there, there grew a dispute concerning these Baths amongst the young Gentlemen; Jamblicus smiling, commanded his pupils to inquire, of some of the men that attended the baths, of the names of the hot ones; but which were

were much more pleasant than the rest, and had been named particularly for a long time. They answer, they understand not the meaning of the names; but that one of them was called Amor, and the other Anterates, The revenger of the Injuries of Lovers. He presently touching the water with his hand, (for he saw perhaps upon the border of the Well, where the water overflowed and ran out) and mumbling over a few words, raised one out of the bottom of the water very fair, and of a comely stature, with his hair as yellow as gold, with a pure white skin upon his back, who was in every thing like one that washed, or had been bathed. The young man being astonished at the novelty of the thing, he went to the other Fountain, and did the like there, calling out the other Amor, in every thing like the former; only that this had darker hair, and longer, hanging down along his neck. Both these familiars or rather Tutelars, came to Jamblicus, embracing and hugging him, as if he had been their own natural father, whom he restored to their former stations; and so having washed, returned from the Bath. Eunapius, in his life.

WHen Basilus the Emperour dyed, his eldest son Constantinus dyed with him, he so passionately loved his father, that he would not live after him, but desired alwayes to see him alive. There was a certain Monk called Theodorus, and surnamed Santabarinus, preferred to the Government in the Metropolis of the Enchaitee, who being a most just man, was in great favour with the King, and with whom the King conversed very familiarly, which, as one he observed to be very devout, and a great lover of the truth. He promised the King to shew him his son alive, sitting upon a horse under a green leavy shade. The foolish old man thought the Vision that the minister of the Devil had deceived his eyes with, had been his son, and that he had embraced his son, when he had nothing but a Phantasm; and so wholly relied on the credit of this Monk, that he, in the conceit that his other son was alive, brought the King into suspicion of his son Leo, whom he had crowned and created King; insomuch, that he imprisoned him, and there tormented the poor innocent Prince a long while. Constantinus our of Zonara.

239.

A Boy called Lotbaringus, come of an honest stock, being corrupted by the evill example of his equals and companions, began to frequent Taverns and tippling-houses, all this while Gilbertus, a kinsman of Nazareus, to whose care he was committed, knowing nothing of it. Mean while, a young man, (which proved proved afterwards the Devil in a man) he being drinking with his por-companions, drew him aside, and promised him he would teach him, how by saying a certain verse, and some words which he could easily learn, he might have money at his pleasure; If in his name he would to his host reckon up a Symbol, and from his heart believe those things which were in the holy book by him written; nor would ever unfold the holy Bible. The youth promising him all he desired, he told him the sum of his art therein; then taking the book in his left hand, holding it down with his fore and middle finger of his right hand, and muttering out the verse, (in the French tongue) brass and copper swims about, and gold leaps, and he shook off his fingers 60 Crowns, the sum he desired. The Youth does the like, as this his Instructor did before him, and with the like success; but in great joy going home with the book, and being much taken with the novelty, opens it, that he might make another by it. In the middle there was a spherical circle, like an Orb, divided with two straight diametrical lines crosswayes, upon which there was a picture drawn of a most dreadful shape, horned, and every way like a Devil; on his right hand were two crosses that joyn'd together, on his left were the immodest parts, both of a man and a woman, most obscenely placed, opposite to each other. Presently, as he beheld these ugly spectacles, his eyes began to darken, and his head to grow light; and whitherloever he went, he would look back ever and anon, verily believing some body followed him close at the heels. His Chamber-fellow, a young man, who had observed this Prodigy, was examined about it, and confest all the businesse to his Tutor, at whose perswasion the papers were cast into the fire, where they remained a full half hour, without being toucht by the fire, (although the matter of them was to all appearance most combustible) to the very greater tour of the young man, and the amazement of all the standers by. Cognatus, l. 8. Narrat.

240.

evet

241.

IN the time of Justinian the Emperour, the Bulgari, a people before that time unknown, inroded upon Illyria and Thracia. Against whom certain Rome Captains, made a voyage with an Army; whom these Bulgari, using Magicall devices and stratagems, did baffle and destroy wholly, except a very few that escaped. Cuspiantius.

242.

Sigebert King of France was conquer'd, his army destroyed, and himself taken prisoner by a people called the Hunni; by reason of their enchantments they used against him. Gregor. Turon. lib. 4. cap. 28.

243.

H*Aquinus* Prince of Norway being to fight against the Danes, by his enchantments so vexed his enemies, which were of a stupendious magnitude, that their heads were so sore bearen by the storms, that their eyes were even sore with weariness and lost their sight, insomuch that they received more detriment by the Elements than the Enemy. The Biarmesi, a people very near the Arctick Pole, fighting in the North with that most powerful King Ragnerus, by their incantations rose a most violent storm against the Danes, and suddenly afterwards a most hot gleam insomuch that between these two extremes, the Enemy were both destroyed and conquered. Olaus, lib. 3. cap. 19.

Arngrinnus

244.

A Arngrimus the Swedish Champion persecuting the wood-Finn, or Tories, and in a conflict having put them to flight, calling three stones behind their backs, they made them appear to the Enemy like so many Mountains, so that Arngrimus seeing he was gul'd, recalled his forces from the pursuit thinking that by those great mountains their passage had been stop'd. The very next day combatting with these same again, when they were not able to stand it out, throwing Snow upon the ground they made the appearance of a River; And so frightening the General of their Enemy with this vain shew of waters, they again escaped. But the third day when they saw their party begin to fail, they yielded themselves up into the Conquerours power. Olaus, lib. 5. cap. 15.

245.

THe Magick vesture called Indusium Necessitatis amongst the Germans, Notbembel, was much esteemed of old, with which they used to arm themselves, and then they were shot-free, and weapon-free, and thereby defended from all manner of bodily harms, and enabled to undergo any hardship whatsoever untoucht. This also was used by women in childbed to procure easie and safe deliverance. Hence was it called the shirt of necessity, because it was put on in the greatest necessities. Thus it was made. On Christmas day at night, maids of most known chastity, did in the Devils name, spin yarn out of the mud, weaved the same, and sewed it together. In the breast of it there were two heads sewed, of which that on the right side had a long beard, covered as it were with a helmet, but that on the left side was grim crowned, and like the Devil; on either side was a crosse made, in length it wrought from the neck down to the middle part of a Man, being compleat with sleeves, &c. Plerus writes in his fourth book, and 19. c. of the sleights of the Devils, That he saw one of them in the Possession of a Very Noble person, left him by his Grandfather, a Soldier, and a most stout man, and that they were Very commonly used in times past, by Kings and Emperours.

246.

THe Polonians in a battle they had with them at Legnica in the year of our Lord, 1240. bore very hard upon the Tartars, and when they gave ground, prosecuted the pursuit. There was in the very rear of the Tartarians, an Ensign whose Motto was onely the letter X and upon the spear of it there was the image of an ugly black long-bearded man. When as the Ensign-bearer did very much shake and waver this colour, it raised a very thick and black smoak. This cloud did not onely obscure the Tartars from the sight of the Polonians, but killed many of the Polonians with the stink of it. The Tartarians did this by some incantations they used, which as well as many other priolations, and divinations they very much practise as well in war as upon other occasions, and do often make conjectures of future events by the entrails of men. The Barbarians when they saw the Enemy in a fear; rallying and encouraging one another, they made a great impression upon them, and having disordered their ranks, made no small slaughter; in which Pompo the leader of the Christians, with many of his valiant associates died. There was so great a massacre of the Christians that day, that the Barbarians having cut off all their ear-rings, filled nine great sacks therewith. Cromerus, libro 8.

247.

A Cruel Warr happening between the Kings of the Danes and Suesia, in the year 1563. It is written out of the Danes Castles, That the Suecian King when he was in his pomp and prosperity, carried four old Witches about with him, which by their enchanted verses did procure all the Victories to the Danes, that he could not do any hurt to his Enemy; And those which were besieged by the Suecian King, were debilitated and made weak, and unfit for War, so that they were glad to yield themselves captives: And although at first there was no credit given to the report, yet afterwards one of these Witches was taken captive by a Souldier of Mounfieur Comitis, a Schwaritzenburg Guntheri of the Duke's Army; and those things which she confessed to him, are written down; Afterwards there was found about the Wells, Springs, and Fenny grounds, a long thred extended out a great length, upon which were many wooden crosses and pictures, with strange characters described on them. Vierus saith, That they grievously offend against the manifest Commands of God, that they require such unlawfull means or helps from the Suesians; and the Danes they are afraid of those magical delusions, and divellish deceits and mockeries. Lib. 2. cap. 33. de Præstigiis Demon.

248.

Empedocles Agrigentinus the Magitian, writes these things of himself;

*Medicamenta quæ et mala et senectutem propulsant,
Audies; tibi enim soli ego ista omnia conficiam,
Et sedabis indefessorum Ventorum vires, qui in terram
Ruentes flatibus, rura corrumpunt,
Et visissim si voles, reduces Ventos, adduces,
Et efficies ex imbre nigro tempestrivam siccitatem
Hominibus, et efficies ex æstiva siccitate,
Flumina sæcunda quæque in æstate spirant,
Et reduces ex Orco defuncti animam viri.*

Open now the labyrinth of thy mare-like ear,
And then strange Cures and Medicines thou shalt hear,
That will all evils and old age repell,
To thee alone I will this mystery tell;
And thou shalt hush the rumors of the wind,
Destruction's beesom when thou dost it find,
To sweep the Country with its poysonous breath,
And Dragon-like doth storm many to death:

And

And if thou wilt that Aeolus should bluster,
'Tis in thy power all the winds to muster.
If black big-belly'd Clouds appear again,
As though they would nothing afford but rain,
Then thou shalt cause in them a barrenesse,
And a great drought, and bring a great distresse
Upon poor mortals: and when th'Earth is dry,
It shall be fleckt by tears of weeping eyes:
But when it's parcht with Summers sultry weather,
The foaming floods shall then all flow together,
And quench its thirst; yea from black Pluto's den,
With Orpheus thus thou'lt fetch thy friend agen.

When for a certain while the winds did so vehemently blow and bluster at Etesia, that they hurt the grain, he gave order that Asses should be excoriated, or their skins should be pluckt off, and make bottles, and to be so far extended in the Promontory, that they might receive the wind; And he being asleep, was called πνευστήριος, as if one should say, The stayer of the Winds. Suidas.

THere are a certain people amongst the Lydians, who are called Persici, their Cities being Hierocasarina, and Hippapa; and in each City there are Temples very large, and Vaults in them, with Altars, upon these are ashes of a far different colour then our ashes are; A Magitian entring in here, covers his head with a gallant attire, where the wood is laid upon the Altar, and calls upon the name of his god, whosoever he be, but (reciting a heathenish verse out of a book) where he hath prayed, there shines forth a pure flame out of the wood, the fire being not stirr'd. Pausanias, lib. 5. saith, he saw this himself.

249.

H*erodotus* testifies, lib. 7. of Xerxes's Governours, that in a tempest of three dayes, they lost four hundred Ships, untill the fourth day, that their Magitians Thety, and the Nereidians did allay the tempestuous winds by their sacrifices.

250.

C*astabilis* is the Phane of the Persians Diana, where they say religious women go upon hot coals barefoot, and are not burnt, Strabo, lib. 12. Under the Mountain of Soracte, there is a City called Feronia; it is called by that name, from a goddesse they had, which the bordering people thereabout worship very much. In the same place there stands a Temple, having a wonderfull kind of sacrifice; For they that are inspired with the Deity, do walk upon burning coals with their naked feet: And therefore there comes a great multitude every year, as well by reason of the solemnity and celebration, as to see the sight. Idem, lib. 5.

251.

252. Tullius Hostilius, the Roman King, in the imitation of Numa Pompilius, whilst he endeavoured to raise up Jupiter Elicius, was struck with lightning when the Palace took fire. Tuscia, a vestall Virgin, being accused of incest at Rome, that she might be cleared of it, and her innocency and chastity might be discovered by her prayers, she drew water with a sieve; in the 609 year, after the City was burnt, Plinius, lib. 28. cap. 2.

253. Armiphus, an Egyptian Magician, in that War which the Romans had with the Quadi, when there was a cruell skirmish and battle, and the victory hanging in Equilibrium, they did not know who should get the battle, by his magical Arts and Inchantments called upon that Mercury, who dwells in the Airy Region, and other spirits, and begged of these a great deal of pouring rain, and thereby did so affright the Quadi, that the Romans got the Victory. Dion Nicen in Antonino, & Suidas. Some attribute this to Julian the Chaldean.

254. There was in old times a Northern people called Finni, that in times past did sell winds to Merchants, offering them three knots twisted by magical cunning; the first knot being opened, they should have gentle winds, and soft gales; the second being unwined, they were to have somewhat more vehement winds; and the third knot being loosed, they should have tempestuous winds and storms. Olaus lib. 3. cap. 16. ex Sax. Grammat.

255. IN the year of our Lord, 1462. Ferdinand the King of the Neapolitans, did besiege very closely the Marcos Town, being situated under the Tower or Castle of the Draconian Mountain, situated near the entrance of the Massick Mountains, and by reason of the scarcity and want of water, he almost compell'd them to yield and surrender themselves; When the wicked Priests durst by their conjurations cause great showers, for there were found in the Townsmen who were besieged, who in the night-time deceiving the Castles Watches, thievously stole to the shore through rough and hard rocks, bringing with them the Image of Christ crucified on the Cross, first with imprecations cursing it, and prosecuting it with Magical Verses; afterwards they fall into a frenzy, calling upon Heaven, Earth, and Sea, for a Tempest. At what time these Priests, the wickedest and blasphemousest of all mankind, studied by their prophane arts to please the Souldiers persisting in their wicked rites and ceremonies, by which means (as it is reported) they procured rain, and an Ass being set before the dores of their house, and they sung an Elegy, as though he were troubled in mind. Afterward the Sacrament was thrown into his mouth, the Ass making great moan, and lamenting, as though with funeral songs; at length they buried him quick before the dores of the Temple, But the rite or ceremony being scarce finished, the Sky began to be, clouded clouded, and the Sea was begun also to be tempestuous, and the splendour of the noon-day was eclipsed with darkness; and now the Heavens began to shine with their flashing fiery lightning; then all other light was obscured, Heaven and Earth trembled with thunder; and Earthquakes, the poles of the Earth were aguish, the Trees that were eradicated and plucked up by the roots, they were blown about in the whirl-winds, the rocks that were cloven with lightning, filled the Ayre with clamorous noises, and there came such a deluge, by this rain and storms, that the Cisterns and Conduits were not able to contain it, but the parched stones, and scorched Rocks did diffuse and spread about every where those showers, torrents, and Rivers which the storm brought; so that the King whose onely hope was to get the Town by want of rain was frustrated of his purpose, and returned to his old Castles at Savonia Pontanum, lib. 9. belli Neapolitani.

Near Elton Pagum a little mile^s from Embrica, placed in the Dutchesse of Clivenfis near the high way, about forty two years since, there was a spirit that vexed travellers after divers fashions, beating them, throwing them from their horses, and overthrowing Waggon, neither was there ever any thing seen but the picture of a hand, they called it Eckerken, the Neighbours thereabout did attribute this wickednesse to the conjuration of a Witch. Wherefore a hand was sacrificed to a Sybill Woman named Puiscops, who by right was a servant to the Earl of Monteniss and at the last the hand being burnt, the grievance ceased. Vierum, lib. 5. cap. 2. de praesig. Daemon.

256.

Pelopon an Olympick charriotter, got some spell or enchantment of Amphion, that the horses in that very plain might alwayes be troubled with an unaccustomed fury and terrour. Pausanius, lib. 6.

257.

Pythagoras called a very cruel savage Bear, of a great bignesse who struck those that looked on him with fear, and fed and nourished him with himself; he once with a low voice as though he were Conjuring in muttering and whispering words, he charged him that he should hurt no living creatures: after that, the Bear going away, went into the Woods, and gathering her Whelps together, and with much faithfulness she (which is very rare in men) did perform that she was sworn to. Perhaps from hence (said Augustine) came Pythagoricall necromancy, by the numbers of Letters, and by the Moon. And it is certainly reported that Pythagoras saw an Oxe near Tarentum, spoiling the Fabacian Corn with his eating, as also by the trampling of his feet, as the Neatherd told him, he counselled the Oxe to spare the Corn. The Neatherds wife laughing, I (saith she) have not learnt Oxe-language, but thou seemest to be versed in that kind of learning, and therefore take my place: presently Pythagoras bending himself to its its its ears, whispered some Magical words into them; and, that which is to be admired at, the most obedient Oxe, being willing to be taught of one that was wiser then himself, not onely gave over tearing the Corn then, but abstained from eating corn of that sort afterwards, and also was freed from his Neatherd, and was turned from a country rustical swain to a Citizen-peripaterick, and waxed old at Tarentum, and was fed by mens hands. Celiv, lib. 19. cap. 1. A. L. Plutarchus in vita Numæ. The same Pythagoras, as Aristotle saith, killed a Serpent in Etruria by biting, who destroyed others by biting. Apollonius in Mirabil. Historiis.

258.

259.

A Pollonius Tyaneus going from Rome to Byzantium by the Citizens leave, did expell out of that City, a great company of Serpents and Scorpions lest they should hurt any one, and did quell and repress the intemperate neighing of horses at the Randevouz of Princes. The same thing was requested of him when he came to Antioch, for when the Antiochians were vexed by Scorpions, and gnats, he made a brazen Serpent, and put it upon a pillar erected on the earth; he commanded the people to carry reeds in their hands, and run about the City striking and lashing with their reeds, and to cry out; Let the City be free from gnats: And by that means the Serpents and gnats were driven out of the City. Cedrenus.

260.

IN the bigger India, there is a Province called Masbas, famous for pretious stones and pearls, for that Sea being very dangerous for Sea-Monsters, the Abrathimins their Magitians, who anciently were called Brachmans, by their daily witchcraft do so bewitch the great huge Whales, that they are able to hurt no body; but in the night-time they let them have their liberty, lest there should be any occasion given to thieves to steal. M. Paulus Venetus, lib. 3. cap. 23. rer. Oriental.

261.

IN the Mart-Towns in Holland, as in Rotterdam and Scheidanus, they chiefly live by fishing; those Inhabitants when they sayl out to catch Herring, they bring such plenty of fish home to Rotterdam, that loads whole Ships. These on a time, drew back their Nets loaded with stones to Scheidanus; which unexpected misfortune was quickly attributed to witchcraft: Wherefore they apprehended a woman, which without delay confessed, that she made it come to passe with her witchcrafts, and that she flew out of a hole of the window; She shewed them a hole of the same bignesse, which she could hardly thrust her finger in, and whilst they were laying in wait for fishes, she went to Sea in a Cockle-shell, Mossel Sculpitis called by the fishermen, and there passed over all that space untill she came to the place where the Herrings were, and there with her inchantments, made the Herrings depart that place, and she stayed in their room: this rumour being spread abroad, she was committed to the flames. Vierius lib. 5. cap. 8.

They

They report that a certain man, one Pasetus by name, that deserved the chief name for his skill in delusions and Magick, he by his enchantments did make a Banquet quickly to seem to be made ready, and furnished in all points; again, when he pleased he could make it to vanish, Suidas. Brachmanns could make ready Banquets of all kinds, and prepared Messes of meat to be set on the Table, when they could see no servitours that set them on. Philostrophus.

262.

It is related that Numa the Roman King, sometimes invited divers Citizens to a Banquet, and set homely sordid furniture, and a very sparing mean supper; but it being begun, there was a speech that he was familiar with a Goddesse, and instantly he let them see his house, was furnished with pretious cups, and the Tables were deckt with all gallantry and magnificent feasts. Plutar. in Numa.

263.

Villiam the Earl of Holland was Crowned by the instigation of the High Priest, being against Frederick 11. and Conrad. filius Aquisgraci Roman King, returned to his Colony, and there made a gallant feast to the Princes. In which it is reported that by the admirable art and skill of Albertus Magnus the Philosopher, the Trees did flourish in the depth of Winter, and the herbs did grow. It is said, that the Writers of that Age relate, that they saw him do this; for this deed it is said, that he had a great Farm given to him, with its appurtenances, in Trajebo, and to have built a Monastery. Cuspinianus.

264.

There is a Tradition, that Pythagoras did perform the Pythagorian sport by a Looking-glasse; he writ something in blood in the Looking-glasse, and quickly the Letters being turned against the Moon, being in the full, to him that stood at his back, shewed the perfect characters, as it were ingraven'd in the Moon. Cæli. lib. 9. cap. 23. Antiq. lxx. ex Suida in voce θεσπιά γλῶσσι.

265.

A Puleius lib. 1. de Asino aureo, hæc scribit. At Athens, saith he, near and over against the Pæcilean Porch, I have seen a young Chevalier plainly to have swallowed a sharp dart, pointed with a pile, and presently again without any reluctancy hide within his bowels a hunters lance made of a little stump, in which part it threatens destruction, and behold the iron of the Lance came out through his gut behind, and he being a fine finical boy tending to Mollities, by his Serpentine windings did so dance, as if he had no bones to hinder him, and therefore was admired of all that saw him.

266.

267. PHilumena*, the harlot of Apelles the Heretick, did put in and take out of a little hole of a narrow glasse bottel, a great loaf of bread. D. Augustinum Sedecias the Jew, did devour and swallow up Souldiers with horse and arms, and a whole load of a Hay, and flew in the Air.

268. IN the reign of Andronicus Senior, the Emperour, and young Andronicus his Nephew, there were Magicians came out of Egypt to Byzantium, to shew their art: they did fasten upon a Platt of ground two or three main masts of a loaded and ballasted ship with ropes, lest it should totter to and fro, or bend to either side; afterwards they stretched one rope from the top of one mast to the top of another; furthermore, twisting and doubling another rope that winded to the ground, they made steps, or a ladder of cords, by which they did climb to the top; and when one of them went up to play their tricks of activity, he would stand on the bare top of the mast, now flinging out one foot, then another upwards, (as though he despised and spurn'd at Heaven) and then turning topsyturvy, his head inclining towards the vertex of the Pole or Mast; at the last, falling on a suddain, one hand holding fast to the rope, and there he hung twinging and turning about the rope, and whirling about towards Heaven (being of a vertiginous brain) and towards earth, in a semi-moment just like a top, afterwards bending his leg, he caught hold of the rope with that, instead of his hand, and there he would be a Supine, viz. hang or lye downwards, and would then circle and turn himself about after the former manner; By and by he would stand straight up on the rope, and taking in his hand bow and arrows, would aim and shoot at a white mark, that was pure a great way off, and shoot so artificially and skilfully, as they that stood on the ground could do no better: And then again shutting his eyes, taking a boy in his arms, he would go up to a higher rope, and so would prance up and down from one rope to another; and one man did do all this.

269. BUt another that sate upon a horse, and spurring him in a race, and as the horse was running, would get upon the saddle, and stand right up on the top of it, and would sometimes with his legs being folded together, sit upon the horse's main, and on his forehead, and on his buttocks, and flying to and fro, as though he were a bird; and sometimes he would light off from his horse as he was running, and then catching hold on his tail, would leap upon him again, and was seen sitting on his saddle presently, and lighting and shifting from another side, or part of his saddle, he would turn himself under his belly, and presently ascend on the other side of the horse, and was carried by the horse, and when he did these things, he did not neglect to whip the horse to obtain the race, and these things did another of the Magicians. Another of them carrying a club about half a yard long on his shoulder, did so belabour that Vessel, being then full of liquor, that it lasted and was serviceable not long after. Another there was that let a long spear upon his head three fathoms long, and from the top downwards, the rope net-wise was folded, or stairs made by it, and a Boy did ascend to the top, sometimes shifting hands and feet untill he came to the spears top, and then he descended again, and he that carryed the spear on his head, walked all the while. Another would throw up on high a Globe, or a round ball of Glasse, and then when it was falling again, would catch it with the extreamest parts of his nails, and sometimes by his elbows, now one now another, but some that were not very expert, fell and perished. And whereas there were above forty came out from their country, almost twenty of them came to Byzantium, and they travelled all over, gathering a great deal of Money of the spectators, and some came for profit, some to shew their art for ostentation sake. Gregor. lib. 8.
fo

Michael Sicidites Magus, Manuel Comnenus being Emperour, who would not suffer nor allow of such sights, which did effacinate the peoples eyes, but sent all these Divils, companions to them which he would have banished; when he saw a little ship in in a large place of the Palace, in which pots and dishes were transported, he by his magical verses caused the Marriner to be squeezed and crushed, and made him no sooner leave to strike and dash the pots together, then they were all resolved to dust: a little while after stroaking his beard, he began to lament, and the mist being pass, he deplored himself, that he was so handled by some irefull diety; and being asked why he broke his ware in peices, he with much greif declared, that, being very busie rowing with his Oares, there was a horrible great Serpent, that extended it self over the earthen Vessells, and that he saw it with staring eyes, as though it was ready to devoure him, and no sooner began to leave off rowing about, than that all the pots and platters were broken and crushed to peices. This Magician played another prank, something like this, for washing in a Bath, he began to quarrell and wrangle with them, by and by he went out of the Bath, a little after some others through fear and haste running out together, and treading upon one another, did leap out of a Channell, in which there was hot water, and when they slip out of it, they were as black as Pitch, and they were thrown out of the Bath, and were soundly kicked. Nicetas 4. book.

270.

Gregory the 7th, as Cardinall Benno saith, that when he pleased, he could so shake and strike his sleeves, from whence fire, like sparks, would come out of them, and so deluding the eyes of the simple by those petty miracles, as a signe of his holiness.

271.

272. With the Ostrogobians is a great lake or Gulph called Veter having a pleasant, but a very long Island, which is as it were its Center, and contains two parish Churches in it; under one of which there is found to be a den or cavern with a convex hollow entrance, and of an unmeasurable unfathomed depth, into which some men out of a tympany-like ostentation descend with lighted torches, and long threds to fathome it, and find how deep it is, as did one Gilbert by name, and others, they met a famous Magitian, who was overcome and bound formerly there by his own Master Catillus, over whom he presumed to domineer and insult, for his hands were tyed with a little rope, and certain Gothish and Ruthenian characters were enseribed on's; and so was cast down into this den by his master; Gilbert remained there being immovable; divers did go into the cavern, not without great danger, to see these strange enchantments. Afterwards the law forbade any to go down themselves, or perswade others to go down, under that perill that they were likely to undergo, viz. death, and so the mouth of the den was stopp'd up with stones. Olavus Magnus, lib. 3. cap. 20.

273. Antonius Heliogabalus with his Magicall arts and enchantments, did Conjure up the departed Souls of Severius his father especially, and Commodus, and many others from out of Hell, who tell him of future things, he esteemed highly of Apollonius Cyprianus Cappadocian who flourished in the reign of Domitien, and honoured and praised him much, and took care that a monument should be made for him, because he was the greatest Conjuror. Dion ex Xiphil.

274. The potent Emperour Arrian, when he understood by Magicall sorceries who should reign after him, whose name should begin with The, he gave command that all those should be slain whose names began with that letter, as the Theodorans, Theodorans, Theodulans, and a certain valiant Man Theodosius coming out of Spain, his father who afterwards ruled Theodosii. Wherefore many being affrighted, anagramatized, and changed their names. It was given out that this divination was made by a Libanian Sophister Jamblicus by name, the Scholler of Proclus, when there was many killed, he commanded the executioners to enquire out the Authors of this divination, Jamblicus fearing much the Princes cruelty, took a cup of poyson and dyed. Socrates, lib. 4. cap. 19. Sozomenus, lib. 6. cap. 35.

Andronicus

Andronicus Comnenus Tyrannus did consult with one Seib a Magician, (having his eyes put out by Manuel the Emperour) about his Successour and his private enemy that watched for him; About the beginning of September, the Devil shewed him in muddy waters the letter Sigma, and afterwards Iota; therefore Andronicus thought that these letters decyphered: Isaurus, to wit, Isaacius Comnenus, the Nephew of Manuel the Emperour, who coming out of Isauria, had appressed Cyprus by his tyranny. Much search about the businesse was there at that time; when the spirit with a great noise flickered in the water, within the exaltation of the crosse, answered, Therefore vain (saith Andronicus) is this Oracle; for how can Isaacius in so short a time come from Cyprus, and take my Kingdom from me? And for this cause he sleighted such divinations and propheties. But when one said, Surely Isaacius Angelus was dead, or else that Oracle would have been verified concerning him; and he said further, That they imagine things that are afar off, and in the mean time neglect those things which are under their feet; and so he was incensed against the diviners art, and puffing, sleighted Isaacius Angelus, as a tender soft pusillanimous fellow; by whom a while after, he was deprived of his Kingdom and life too. Nicetas, lib. 2.

275.

Euphrosyna, the Wife of Alexius Angelus, the Emperour of the Byzantines, when she desired to know future contingencies, did give up her mind to all kind of wicked divinations, and acted many unlawfull things: she cut off the bill of a Porcupine hogg, which she saw ready with its piked bristles and cruel teeth, to fall upon a Lion in Hypico; and she chastised with many stripes, famous Hercules Image, the gallant workmanship of Lysimachus, lying upon a Lyonesse skin, and deplored her fortune, leaning with her head upon her hand; neither was she satisfied or contented with this, but did mangle and break in pieces divers other Statues and Images, and knocked them on the head with hammers: some certain Pedlars diligently taught birds to imitate humane words, so that in the streets and porches they would sing with their ordinary voice, Justitia Politica, uterunda et blanda. Nicetas.

276.

IN the time of Galerius Maximinus, a persecutor of the Christian, there was one Theotecnus at Athens, who was an enchanter, and a cruel enemy to the Christians, and did as much as in him lay, to cause the Christians to be accused and brought before the Emperour; and by this deceit he did it, by his conjurations and Sorceries he caused Jupiter's image to utter these words: Speak to Jupiter, that these Christians may be expelled out of the City and fields, and banished, as being enemies to him. The subtilty of this wicked Magician easily took effect under such a wicked Prince. Eusebius, lib. 8.

277.

278.

Jason the son of Eson, Nephew to Pelias the Thesſalonian King, wiſhing to do ſomething worthy of memory, and to imitate ſome heroick deeds of Perſus and others; Pelias did conſent to his deſire, nor that he might encrease the glory of his youth, nor adde ſplendour to it, but hoping that he would quickly be ſlain in ſome warlike Expedition or other; for he feared his brother Eson, leſt by the help of his ſon, he ſhould get the Kingdom from him. In the mean while, he promiſed him ayd for his Warr, if he would prepare for a Voyage to Chalcos, to get the Golden Fleece. Then was Pontus inhabited by the Barbarians and wild Nations, and they were ſo cruel to ſtrangers, that they ſlew all them that ſailed thereabouts; Wherefore Jaſon makes a Ship near the Pelian Mountain, of a greater bigness and bulk, and which had greater furniture, then in thoſe dayes they uſually had; for there was onely then uſed ſome little Ships or Frigots. The rumour of this thing was ſpread all through Greece, ſo that he invited many gallant young men, of their own accord, to come to his Warr; Jaſon choſe the chief of them that deſired to go with him, which number was four and fifty. Of theſe who were famous, was Caſtor and Pollux, Hercules, Talamon, Orpheus, Atalanta, Scheneſ, beſides Theſpius's ſons, and the author of the Voyage, Jaſon. The Ship (we will not ſay, when dipped in the water) was called Argo, from Argos its builder, who alſo took care of repairing her, when ſhe was ſailing on her Voyage; or elſe named Argos, for her admirable ſwiftnesse, becauſe the Ancients called any thing that was ſwift, Argon; they preferred Hercules to be their Captain, the chiefeſt for Verue and Fortitude. The wings of ſame flying all abroad the Countrey, did bring news, that all thoſe that ſailed with Jaſon to Pontus, periſhed by a mortality. In the firſt place, Pelias made Jaſon's father to drink Bull's blood; he ſlew his brother Pomachus, being but as yet a boy. Alchimede his Mother was deſigned for death; for all ſhe was a Woman, yet ſhe did one very memorable thing with a manly courage; when ſhe fled into the inmoſt receſſes of the Palace, and there begging of the gods, that they would reward and revenge ſuch impiety, ſhe ran her ſelf thorough with a ſword: Jaſon returned back into Theſſaly, and the Argonautes promiſed him to do what they could to revenge ſuch an horrible wickedneſſe, if he would fight againſt the City. Medes promiſed, that by her craft ſhe would kill Pelias, and would deliver the Kingdom unto them without any danger, and that ſhe would do her taſk too; for ſhe was to inſtruct them in every thing, and ſhe from the Palace was to give ſigns of the whole Affair (ſmoke by day, fire by night) to the Keepers of the Watch-Tower on the Sea-coaſt; therefore preparing Diana's Image, which was convex and hollow, in which ſhe hid divers kinds of venomous things. Afterwards by her medicines making her hairs gray, and her face to be ſo rugged and wrinkled, that ſhe ſeemed to all that lookt on her, to be an old woman; then taking Diana's image, went forth into the City, and ſtirred all up to ſuperſtition, as though ſhe she came from the Northern Countries for the King and Citie's good and welfare; divers worshipped her religiously as a Goddess, all the whole people was so besotted; and they brought Medea into the King's Palace: These things much increased Pelias's superstition, yea, and his daughters were so bewitched by Medea's Inchantments, that they were perswaded that she was a goddess, that was come for the prosperity and felicity of the Kingdom; for she did affirm, that Diana was carried through the Ayr by Dragons, and that she had gone about the greatest part of the World, and that she might be perpetually worshipped, they ought to choose the most Religious King they could get; and moreover, that the Goddess had commanded her, that with some Medicines, she should take away the old age from Pelias, and turn him young again. At which words the King admiring, commanded Medea to try the experiment upon her self, that they might believe what she said. She required, that some pure water might be brought her by one of his daughters, and when she had shut her self up in her bed, she anointed her body, and by the strength of herbs she was reduced to her former age; It is reported, that she by her enchantments caused a Goddess in the likeness of Dragons to fly through the air, and supported by the Hyberboreans, which seemed to turn towards Pelias; Pelias esteemed very much of Medea, and diligently commanded his daughters to do what she commanded, and be observant of her, and whatsoever she gave in charge to be done about her body, that they should do it: In the following night it is reported, that Medea should say, that it was necessary that the body of Pelias should be boyled in Copper, which when the Virgins were about to do it, they required one experiment, that they might give trust to her words; then there was a Ram that was kept in the house for many years, to whom she promised to the Virgins, if she should first boyl that, she would afterwards restore it into its former condition again. When the Virgins did consent, they relate, she did boyl the body of the Ram, which was divided into little pieces, and by her medicines brought forth the figure of a Lamb out of the kettle; which being done, and believing Medea, all the virgin daughters, except Alceste, (who for her eminent Piety, abstained from doing violence to her father) they slew their father by beating of him: Then it is said, That Medea, lest that they should boyl the body of Pelias, made as though she would first perform her Vow to the Moon, and commanded the Virgins with their lamps to ascend to the top of the Palace, and there in the Chelchians tongue, made a long speech, to drive away the time, and gave the sign to the Argonauts that the time was now come of performance of the thing; they out of a prospective glasse, saw fire, and then supposing the King was dead, came swiftly, demanding the City, and going upon the walls, and with glittering drawn swords, went straightway to the Palace, kill'd all the watches that withstood them, &c. Diodorus, lib. 4. cap. 3.

279.

Johannes Teutonicus, very famous in old time, his Father was a Priest, and by reason of the good opinion of learning that was had of him, he was preferred to Halberstatensem Parish, to which none but Noblemen and true begotten legitimate, were to be admitted; but he was much despised of his colleagues for his base birth: he invited them to a sumptuous Banquet, and taking occasion, asked them whether or no they would see their own fathers. And when they told him that they earnestly desired that he would do so, and by his Magicall art, he made appear horrid ghastly spectrums, representing the shape of Cooks, Stable-grooms, fools, rusticks, whose faces they confessed themselves, that they had sometimes seen at their fathers houses. But Teutonicus did Conjure up his father in the comeliest, beaurifullest shape he could; with canonicall Priestly habit, in a fair Visage. The shadows being passed away, he asked his guests whose father now they judged to be the nobler: they being affrighted, (as it were Planet-struck) and confounded with shame, went every one home to their own houses, and after they never troubled Johannes, who was ennobled by his vertue, if not by his extraction or birth. Johannes.

280.

Nicholas Venerus, in his Indian History, tells of a Pilot of India, when the winds did cease, invoking his God which he called Muthian, and that at length he went to a certain Arabian, and that the Man being impulled by some invisible spirit, ran along the Vessel, till he came to a Table, that for that purpose was fixed to the Mast, and devoured certain coals that lay thereby: and calling for a Cocks blood, when they had killed one, and brought him the blood of it, he drank it off, and when he had done, askt them what they desired? and when the Pilot answered, Wind, he re-demanded what wind, and when he told him an East-wind, he promised them for three dayes they should have it at will, and admonished them that they would be carefull to improve the opportunity. When the Conjuratation was past, the Arabian remembered nothing of what he had Prophefied, done or suffered, but to a minute of the time, all things fell out accordingly. Cardanus de subtilitate, libro de Dæmonibus.

281.

S. Jerome writes in the life of Hilarion the Eremit. That in a Mart Town of Gaza, a young Man languished for the exceeding love he bare to a young maid a neighbour of his, who when he could do no good by frequent courtings, touchings, jestings, noddings, whisperings, and other allureing dalliances, the common exordiums of the decay of chastity; he went to Memphis, that so having made known his condition, he might be instructed by the Magicians, how to circumvent this young Lady. And after he had been disciplined for a years time by the Priests of Esculapius, he returned, and hides under the threshold of the young maidens dore certain Magical words, and enchanting figures, graven in plates of Cyprian brasse. Suddenly the maid grows mad, and casting by the decent binding of her head, tears her hair, gnasheth with her teeth, calls upon the name of the young man; such was the extasy of her love that made her raging mad. Her Parents bring her to a Monastery, deliver her to an old man; immediately the Devill howling, confesseth; I have suffered violence having been brought hither against my will, how bravely did I delude people by Memphian dreams, O the crosses and torments that I suffer. Thou wouldst have me go out, and I am fast bound under the threshold. I will not go out unlesse the young man that boldeth me bound, dismisse me. Then the old man saith Great is thy fortitude, who art bound by the drawings out of threds and plates: tell why thou wast so bold as to enter into a young maid, the servant of God? That I might preserve her a Virgin. Thou preserve her, thou betrayer of chastity? Why diddest thou not rather enter into him that sent thee? To what purpose should I enter into him who had my colleague the Devill of love? The holy man did not command him to seek out the plates or gravings, lest the Devill might have seemed to have quitted the enchantments, or he to have given credit to the Devills speech, affirming the Devills deceitfull, and dexterous in dissimulation. Moreover having restored the young maid to her former right wits, he much blamed the Virgin for committing such fautes, whereby the Devill should enter her. These things, Hierome.

Cyprian

Vhen by the severe laws of Pope Hadrian the sixth, the pestilence seemed little restrained by the couching of the sick that so increased, that many dead corps were to be seen in the streets, and crosse wayes, and in few dayes that seemed to depopulate the City, but that a certain Greek, by name Demetrius Spartanus, the common people favouring him, undertook the work of removing the Plague, no man being so bold as to forbid his superstition. For a wild Bull, the half of whose horn he had cut off, putting a Magick verse into his right ear, suddenly he made him so tame, that casting a small thred about his whole horn, leading him which way he pleased, he immolated him at the Amphitheater, to appease the divine power, nor did he wholly deceive the hope of the credulous multitude, for by the prosperous offering of that vain sacrifice the sicknesse began to abate. Jovius, lib. 21. As his kinsman concerning that matter of observation, and worthy animadversion, writeth, in the year of Christ, 1522. a most grievous pestilence invaded Rome; There was then a certain Greek, who had a long beard, with an ugly aspect, who professed himself to be saturnal, that is, a helper of evil, he promised if he should have thirty pieces of Gold to him and his heirs forever, to cause a cessation of the Plague; The Roman accept of the condition. He commandeth to bring him a black bull, and find out a new well in the suburbs of the City: in the dead of night he cometh to the bottom of the hill Calvus, where he found the Bull prepared, and the Well; he sets upon making a rope, and as he was weaving that, sometimes with a high, and and sometimes a low voice, I know not what he murmured out, in Greek; the clamour of his voice was heard by many spectators: afterwards he casting a rope about the neck of the Bull, they report the Bull being made tame and gentle, he led him thrice about the Well, then casting the Bull prostrate upon the ground, the Bull making three weak or harmlesse kicks, presently with little reluctancy, suffered him to cut off his horns; which done, he commanded the Bull to be led by the shepheards thorough the seven gates of the City, and the seven high-wayes, and afterwards to be let loose that he might return to the fields and pastures, wherein he was wont to feed. They that were there, then said, that he lifting up his eyes towards Heaven, and making I know not what kind of humming, they saw Stars falling, and innumerable likenesses of dogs, and Wolves, and such kinds of living Creatures, to fly all about, &c. Things being finished in this manner, the Magitian being returned to the City, took such course with the Roman Magistrates that they commanded by publick edict that no one should of three dayes kill any four-footed beasts, the rulers of the City who were then absent, when they returned, commanded the Greek impostor to be apprehended, and cast into Prison; scarce escaping the threats of the people, he was punished with eternall banishment. The Magick book which he used, was publickly burnt. Gilbert. Cognatum, lib. 8. of Narrations.

283.

Antonius Benevemus, lib. 8. concerning the hidden causes of sicknesses, thus writeth; A Maid of the age of sixteen, was pulled with griping grief in the bottom of her belly by infernal spirits, and falling into horrid clamours, her whole belly did on a suddain so swell, that one would have thought she had gone eight moneths with child; She had an exhausted voyce, and sometimes casting her self upon her bed, and joyning her feet to her neck, she leaped up, and falls upon her feet again; casting her self down, she immediately again started up; this she oft did by turns, but by little and little coming to her self, and somewhat refreshed, she was asked how she did; she was wholly ignorant what had passed: but we inquiring the causes of this sickness, thought this evill to proceed from the suffocation of the matrix, and evil vapours drawn upwards, and then striking the heart and brain: But when she could not be helped by Physick, she was wonderfull fierce, looking about her with a stern countenance, fell at length to vomit, whereby she cast up long and crooked nayls, brasse pins, with wax and hairs conglomerated; and lastly, a gobbet of such magnitude, that the gorge of no creature whatsoever could wholly devour; and when she had done this often, I my self, being a spectator, conceived her to be possessed with an evil spirit, who whilst she did these things, amazed the beholders. Wherefore being afterwards detected by more manifest signs and arguments, she was committed to the Ecclesiastical Physicians; for we have heard her prophesie, phesie, and seen her do those things besides, which go beyond the power of sicknesse, and exceed humane understanding.

C Ardanus relates in his fifteenth book, concerning the variety of things, of a certain honest Countreyman and friend, who might more easily have been deceived, then deceive, who told to him, that he had many years laboured of an unknown disease, at what time by his enchantments he vomited glass, nailes, and hair: and though at length he were restored, to the very day he relates these things, he did affirm, that he thought he had a huge heap of broken glasse in his belly, and a sound or noise as one should shake a bag full of broken glasse, by which he was much vexed, and also that he the seventh hour of every eighteenth day, although he numbered them not, had so many blowes on his heart, which was a huge trouble to him for eighteen years since his recovery; who sees not the actions, legerdemanes, and vexations first and last, that the Devil puts upon those whom he finds fit, by their simplicity, for his delusions. 284.

I Pago Beuensestet under the Duke of Brunswick, a Maid named Margaret, daughter of Henry Achils, twenty years old, in the year 1562, on the holy day of the Visitation of the blessed Virgin, about to wipe or make clean her shooes, drawes out her knife, and goes to a place fit for that purpose; the Maid having lost her strength by a long Feaver, was yet weak; contrary to her expectation, in comes to the house a woman somewhat old, and asketh her, Whether she were yet troubled with her Feaver? and whether she were free from her disease? It was answered her by the Maid, As yet I have not been able to go out of the house: The shooes being made clean, she puts the knife in her bosome; which when afterwards it was diligently sought by her, she saw a black dogg of an horrible shape, lying upon his belly under the table, which with grinning shewing his teeth, went away; presently it seemed to the Maid, that from her head to her feet did flow something, as it were, of a cold humour; to whom happened also a defect of the Mind or Soul, and she becomes as dead without sense to the third day, wherein at last she begins to breathe again, and affirms, that she certainly knew, that that knife which she had taken out of the sheath of her Sitter, did stick fixed in the left side of her own body, for that she did perfectly feel pain in that very place; by which she was so exercised, that being bowed double, she was forced to lean upon a staff, after three moneths there begun to appear and stand out on her left side above the Spleen, betwixt her two lowest spurious ribs, an Imposthume of the bignesse of a Cocks egg, and like the Moon, by whose increment or departure, she either swelled or grew quiet. The thirtieth of June, there issued out of the Ulcer such store of matter, that the swelling was somewhat remitted, and then as it were the point of a knife appeared; the Surgeon of Duke Henry, sent for from the Castle of Wolffenbuttel, 285.

took out with instruments the point of the knife standing out under her ribs, and cured the Ulcer. 10 Vierus lib. 3. cap. 12. concerning the impostures of Devils.

286.

From the Nativity of Christ, 1539. in a certain Town of the Bishoprick Erstetting Fugestat; Uricus Newseffer, a Husbandman, when he was tormented about one of the sides of his ribs with the cruel torments of griefs, upon a sudden he feels with his hand an Iron nail under his unhurt skin, which a Surgeon, a servant, there digged out with his knife; notwithstanding his griefs ceased not, but daily waxed worse and worse; wherefore when the wretch saw there was no remedy of his grief, but by dearth, he taking a knife cut his own throat. Therefore being dead, he was brought to be buried the third day; there were present then Rossenbader of Wissenburg, a Town of the Noricks in Germany, and John Essente, a servant attending about such businesse, who, a greater company beholding, fell suddenly upon opening the ventricle of the dead Husbandman, wherein they found very long and smooth wood, four Steel culters, partly sharp, partly like a Saw with teeth, and two rough tools of Iron, every one whereof did exceed the length of a span, and there was like the cover of a Globe: but that thou wilt most admire, is, how so many and so great tools could be contained in the cavity of his Ventricle, & by what art they are carried in; certainly by no other, then the cunning and deceit of the Devil, Joan Langius, in his Book 1. Epistle med. 28. & Vierus, Book 3. Chapter 8. Concerning the legerdmain of Devils.

287.

A Certain religious man an inhabitant of the Town Hesden in a field called Leodren, for Religion's sake, went to Jerusalem, stayed after his companions at Jerusalem that he might celebrate the holy time of Easter there, which his other companions omitted; and being afraid afterwards, lest by that delay he had lost the opportunity of conveying himself to Europe, he made haste towards the Sea at Joppa, and therefore was weary in his journey, and meeting with a Knight, who shewed himself so compassionate, that he took him up behind him, and that very day, to the great admiration of all his, was carried into his own Town Hesden; where it being declared how it happened, the Inhabitants thought him mad, he went to the Temple of St. James in Spain, and returned again before his companions were come back from Jerusalem; when that was affirmed by them, that he stayed behind them at Jerusalem, then what he had told them concerning the celerity of his return was believed. Fulgosius, Book 1. chap. 6.

288.

Boccatus of a Noble Lombard, who had entred himself a Sculder for Jerusalem, to gain the Holy-land, and departing, left to his wife part of his ring, which had his coat of Arms ingraven upon it, with this condition, that if he returned not within three years, with this earnest and symbol, she might marry another husband, Husband, he being taken Prisoner in Judea, and carried into Egypt to the Sultan (whom his Father had entertained a good while travelling into Europe, though unknown) for the Hospitalities sake of his Father, his own Wisedome and dignity, he presently so pleased the Sultan, who by dayly familiarity approving his behaviour, he valued him more then all he had. The three years being finished he fell into great sorrow, the cause whereof the Sultan having diligently searched out, calls a Magitian who took that care that he caused him being fast asleep in a pretious bed, and loaded with a great burthen of Gold, and pretious stones to be carried in the last night of the three years into the chief Temple in Joopia, a City in Lombardy. The Tutor affrighted with the sight, flies, and with other things of the Vision, relates in Egypt which he saw meeting him, making hast to the house of his Wife who was to take home another Husband the next evening.

Johan. Baptist. Port. Neopotalitan, in his Book 2. of Natural Magick, thus writeth, There falleth into my hands, a certain woman somewhat old, who of her own accord, undertook to inform me, within a certain time, what those things are which suck the bloud of Infants in their Cradles, in the form of a night Owl, which men call a Scritch Owl; she commands all that were come along with me witnesses, to go out of dores, and casting off her cloathes, rubbed her self very much with a certain Oyntment; we perceive through the chinks of the dore, that by vertue of the soperiferous Oyl, she fell into a deep sleep, we out of dores discover great beatings, and pinings, but so great was the force of her deadly sleep, that that took her sense from her, when the strength of her Physick began to decrease and grow weak, we return from without to the place, and she being called from her sleep, began to tell many raving dotages, that she had passed Seas, and Mountains, giving us many false informations. We shew her black and blew sores caused by the beatings which we heard, but she most stily denies.

289.

They report Apollonius Tyaneus to have received of Jarcka, the Prince of the Indian Philosophers, a gift, as it were, of Divine power, that he was partaker of very great secrets every other day, Alex. from Alex. book 2. chap. 19.

290.

Augustine concerning the City of God, book 18. chap. 18. saith, When we were in Italy, we heard of certain women keeping Victualling-houses, and using evil arts, who by cheese given to whom they pleased, turn'd them presently into beasts, to carry necessary burdens, which having performed, and returning to their former state, could perfectly remember all which in the mean time happened to them. Apuleius also himself, in his book which he inscribed by the title of The golden Asse, reports, That it happened to himself, having taken poyson, his humane soul remaining, that he was transformed into an Asse, &c. but it is manifest, that these are legerdemaines, and delusions of the Devil, deceiving the Soul and senses of men by vain conceit.

291.

292.

Vincentius reports in his Speculations, he tells us in his book 3. chap. 109. and William of Malmshury, Monk. in his History, in the time of Peter Damianus, That there were two old women Inneholders, that is, such as gave entertainment to travellers for their money, (for an Inne is properly called a publick place of entertainment for money) which old women living together in the same house, and exercising the same art of Witchcraft, when a stranger came alone, they transformed him into an horse, a swine, or an Asse, and sold him for a certain price to Merchants. A certain day a young man appearing, by his gesture a Stage-player, being entertained of them, and eating meat with them, was by them transformed into an Asse, they gained much by him, who shewed many wonderfull tricks to passengers; for at the command of the old women, or any sign they made, he turned, or moved which way they pleased; for his understanding perished not, though his speech ceased, whereby the old women got much money; which being perceived by a neighbour, he for great summe of money bought the Asse; but the women conditioned he should so keep him, that he should not go into the water. His keeper for a long time kept him from the water, but at last was so incautious, that he brought him to a pool in the neighbourhood, where he a long time wallowing and tumbling, he was restored to his own proper shape; and when his keeper raised him up to see whether it were his Asse or no, he told him who he was; the servant told this to his Master, his Master telleth the same to Pope Leo, the old women being converted, confesse it. The Pope doubted hereof; but a most learned man, Petrus Damianus manifested to him, that it might be true, by the example of Simon Magus, who had imprinted upon Faustinius his own image or likenesse.

293.

Michael Verdunus, and Peter Burgottus, Shepherds, having contracted with the Devil, could when they pleased, by the use of a certain oyntment, transform themselves into Wolves, and killing men, and other creatures, they ran away amongst other Wolves, as people imagined. They were burnt alive in the Diocess of Bisnuitina, in the year of Christ, 1521. Pierus, book 5. ch. 10. concerning the legerdemains of Devils.

IN the year 1348, on the eighth Calends of February, In Norway a most great Earthquake did happen, as it is recorded at Pannonia, Illiricum, Dalmatia, Carnis, and Hæstria, which lasted without any intermission for the space of fourty dayes; the Earth was variously shaken, wonderful works were shewed, Austria and Bavaria felt the losse of twenty six Towns and Castles thereby thrown down, as it is related in the acts of that year; Men and Beasts perished, Walls, Temples, Buildings were overturned, whole Cities overthrowen; moreover mountains burst asunder, squeezed that ruinous destruction and losse of men for two Mountains (as it were) ran to the devoured Cities, and being drawn violently to the Town of Elise, killed all living Creatures that were therein; the gaping of the Earth, that thereupon ensued, partly remained as the Earthquake left it; but some part of it growing wider, swallowed up all before it, the soyl being so fallen into it, that there was no possible passage. Fifty men, and more rusticks, many kindreds, with Cattel, were overwhelmed, and bodies were reduced into Statues of salt. Conradus of Meydenburg, an excellent Philosopher and Mathematician, speaking of this tempestuous Earthquake, saith, That these Statues were seen by him and the Austrian Chancellor at Charmum. Aventinus in his Annal of the Bozori, book 7.

294.

Osgillus, King of the Swedes and Goths, an exact observer of Justice and Equity, lost the love of many of his Nobles that disliked such severity, who being enraged at him, procured a Bull charmed with magical incantations, and placed him in a high-way, wherein the King passing was set upon, and by his horns was killed, and so lost his Scepter. John Mag. in his book 8. chap. 13.

295.

Philip Melancthon reports, that he was told by Christopher Grass and Sigismund Galenius, that a certain Virgin of Bomania, that was conversant amongst men two years after her death, and who was at a Banquet wherunto she was invited, not tasting any meat, and sitting amongst other Virgins, by chance a Magitian present knowing the fraud of the Devil, saith to them that were present; This pale Maid hath been dead, and coming straight to her, taketh from under her right shoulder, an enchantment, whereupon she appeared an ugly dead corps. This enchantment had been performed by another Magitian, and thereby the Devil had carried about this corps all this while.

296.

A Studious young man of Effordia, with the raging love of a Virgin, became almost mad by the violence of his passion; he being intimately acquainted with one skilfull in the Magick Art, was told by him, that he would by his skill so work, that the Maid with whom he was so much in love, should come to him, so that he would abstain from the imbracing of her; the young man promisseth miseth continence; presently the young Maid being most beauriful, enters his bed-chamber, by words and gestures declaring much love; which he seeing, upon his first beholding her, he was so wrapt out of himself, and unable to command his affectionate passion, imbraces her very courteously; whereupon the Virgin presently falls down dead, which did infinitely torment both him and the Magitian, who by his enchantments so worked at length, that the Devil entered her body, and by his motion of the Devill, the Maid returned home; she was intent on her accustomed labors, but wholly pale and silent. After three dayes her Parents got Divines to her, who when they had seriously conversed with her, the Devil went out of her, and she falling down, appeared a meeringly base carcass; blood is the cause of a good colour, and lively spirits; these the Devil cannot create: God onely our Creator can. Out of the Colloquies of Luther.

297.

298.

IN the year of Christ, 1543, a certain Italian, by name Andreas, a jugler of Sathan, coming up and down amongst the Sepulchres, and leading a red blind dog, by which he did many prodigious things; sometimes in the middle of the Market, Andreas (a great company standing about him) would cause them to throw down upon the ground gold, silver, and Iron rings, behind this dog, which after he had mixed together, the Dog at his command would deliver every one of them as they were taken asunder to his proper owner; in like manner divers sorts of coyn and moneys being confusedly heaped together, he would at his Masters command in order discern, and deliver to the right owners; and if he were askt, who were fornicators, adulterers, or men of great authority and credit, he would most certainly declare; and if any such required the knowledg of any thing from him, he would suddenly satisfie them: wherefore some did not doubt to affirm, that he was possessed with a Pyrrhonical or Satanick spirit. Cron. Hed. part. 2.

299.

VW Hen Valens was Emperour of the Romans, Libanus, a Rhetorician, and Jamblicus, the Master of Proclus, are reported by the divination of a dung-hill cock, to have found out who should be Emperour after Valens; and moreover, after this manner it was found out; Twenty four letters are written in dust, and a grain of Wheat and Barley is put to every letter; then the Cock, certain verses having been recited, is let loose, and they conceiv'd out of what letters he took the corns, the same being joyned together, would declare the thing that was inquired after; which when they had done, the Cock took the corns out of the letters Θ Δ Ο Α. They read the letters, but yet esteemed the signification doubtfull; for it was conceived, that either Theodosius, or Theodorus, or Theodotus, were designed thereby. It being known, according to my relation, Valens suspected many that had those names, being also sought out by the diviners themselves.

John

John Faustus, a filthy beast, and a sink of many devils, carried 300.
about with him an evil spirit in the shape of a dog; At Wittenburg, when the Edict of the Prince to apprehend him was promulgated, he fled away; so coming to Norimburg, and being set down to dinner, he began to be very much troubled, and suddenly paying what was due to the Host, went his way; he was scarce gone out of the dores, but the Serjeants inquire concerning him:
at length, the fates compelling him, being brought to Wittenburg, he sat down, being very melancholy, his Host desired him to tell the cause of his sorrow; his answer was, I pray you be not terrified this night, though you hear a huge noise, and the very shaking of the whole house; in the morning they found him dead in his chamber, his neck being turned topsie-turvy. No wonder, that the Devill is wont to give such rewards to his servants.

IN the year of our Lord, 1323, Frederick of the Austrian Family, 301. challenging to himself the Title of Emperour, against Lewis of Bavaria, Emperour, waged a cruel Warr, in which Frederick being taken, was for three whole years detained prisoner in a Castle near the famous Town Naburg, situated by the River Nabus. In the meantime, a certain Magitian coming to Duke Leopold, the brother of Frederick, promised, that he would free him out of prison, and take such care, that within the space of one hour, he should be safely conveyed into Austria; Leopold promised great rewards to the Magitian, when he should effect his promise. When night was come, both of them went into a Circle designed, and prepared by Magicall incantations, the Magitian by his charms, raised a spirit, which appeared in the likenesse of a Man, receives the Mandate to bring Frederick home, if he did not refuse to follow him:
Therefore the spirit immediately in the night, comes to the Captive Prince, saying to him, Thy Brother Leopold hath sent me hither to take thee out of Prison; wherefore arise, and mount this Horse, and I will safely conduct thee to thy Brother. To whom Duke Frederick answered, who art thou? Ask not who I am, saith the spirit, but without further delay mount this horse, if thou desirest to be delivered out of Prison, then great fear and trembling seized, not onely upon Frederick, but also upon all that were with him; but they signing themselves with the sign of the Crosse, the spirit vanished away, and returned alone to the Magitian. In the Chronicle of Hedion, book 4.

IT is reported that in the year of Christ, 1271. one John, an Al- 302.
main, a Priest at Halberstadium, was so skillfull in the Magick Art, that upon Christmas Eve in the morning, he said Masse thrice.
First at Halberstadium. Secondly, at Moguntia. Thirdly, at Colonia, by the swiftnesse of his Horse which he rode upon, which with incredible speed, carried him from one of these Towns to the other.
Many very prodigious things are written, which this Priest did by his Magicall Art.

303.

IN the year of our Lord, 1272. came to Crucenatum, a Town in Lower Germany, a Magitian full of tricks and Legerdemains who cut off his servant's head publicly in the Market place, the people being spectators, and within half an hour, joyned that to his body which lay as it had been dead, upon the ground; the servant immediately recovering life, and becoming as sprighful as ever he was. He was seen carried up and down in the Ayre, and making a great noise, he seemed to be a-hunting to those that beheld him often times. He seemed also sometimes (to them that stood gazing at him) to be an armed man that did greedily devour a Carr or Waggon of Wine or Wood and the Horses too.

304.

IN the year 1553. two inchantresses were taken, which by tempests, hail, and cold, endeavoured to destroy the fruits of the Earth. These women stole a Neighbours child, which they cut in pieces, and put into a pot to boyl. It came to passe by providence, that the Mother seeking her child, came at that instant, and saw in the pot the disiect members of her child, therefore these two pestilent Witches being taken and examined, confessed (by tortures that were deservedly inflicted upon them) that if the boiling of this child had been perfected, they had caused such terrible cold as had destroyed the fruits of the Earth. Hedion. book 5.

305.

IN the year of our Lord, 1558. in a neighbour Town of Ahena, a certain Magitian cured many mad-men by hearbs which the Devil had shewed him. Moreover he had commerce with him, and took dayly advice of him for curing of diseases; it happened that there was great dissensions twixt him and a neighbour of his, a Carpenter; in their railings and brawlings, the Carpenter did exasperate and vex the mind of the Magitian with some bitter and reproachfull speeches. After some Moneths were expired, the Carpenter fell into a dangerous disease, and as one having forgot all former discontent between him and the Magitian, seeketh to him to cure him of his most miserably afflicting sickness: The Magitian counterfeiting himself appeased and much his friend, whilst he promised his utmost indeavours to cure him, in the mean time he resolves, having this opportunity, to revenge the wrongs he conceived, and gives him a potion composed of venomous hearbs, which as soon as the Carpenter had taken, his body was cruciated and tormented with such extream pain, that he suddenly gave up the Ghost. The wife therefore of the Carpenter with his kindred, accuse the Magitian of man-slaughter, for which cause he is convented before the Senate at Ahena, and being examined by torments, he confessed this murder, and other impious and most wicked deeds, and that he had learned his Magick of a certain old Woman in the neighbourhood, which lived at the Wood Hercynia for which most horrible and flagitious arts, they caused him to be ryed

tyed to a stake and burnt to death. Manlius, in his Collections.

Martin Luther using many words concerning Witches, tells 306.
that his Mother was many wayes vext by an inchantresse, a neighbour, insomuch that she was wont for fear to shew her much kindnesse, and by intreaties and courtesies, used to procure her good will: for this Witch did so torment her Infants by inchantments, that with continuall crying, they expired their lives. And when a certain Preacher in his Sermon declaiming against such kind of Witches, and alluding to her impiety, he was so infested and infected with inchantments, that he had no way to escape destruction; for by these Witchcrafts, the ground so shrunked from his feet as he went, that he could not stay himself, but was thereby forced into the River, being unable to stay himself till he was cast therein. And when it was enquired of Luther whether it were possible that such things should happen to the Godly, he answered. Yes certainly, for our mind or Soul is subject to a lye, yea our body is obnoxious to death and afflictions; and I am periwaded that my sicknesses, (God permitting) infest me by inchantments: but God, though he suffer his Elect to fall into such calamities, yet he delivers them from the same.

Two Witches being in an Inne, filled two Urns, or water-pots with water, and set them aside; and when in the evening they consulted, whether they should destroy the corn or wine; by chance the Host hearing their discourse, and taking the water-pots, he came softly to the bed-side, where they lay and cast the water upon the Witches in bed; which turning suddenly into Ice, the Witches were utterly extinct: Whereupon, saith Luther, the power of Satan greatly appears in these Witches; for two wayes doth God shew his power, by suffering the Devil to assail men by Witches; first, to punish the sins of the wicked: secondly, to try the pious and faithful, and for their glorious approbation which they will obtain by their perseverance in faith: for without the permission of Almighty God, the Devil can hurt no man; for the Lord saith, He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye: And Christ, without the will of my Father, a hair cannot fall from your head. 307.

Alexander the sixth, when he was Cardinal, spent his time 308.
both day and night, in contriving how he might obtain the Popedom; and that he might more easily accommodate his desire, he set his study upon the Satanical Art of Magick, and so far proceeded therein, that he promised the Devil diligently to observe him, if he would satisfie him in those things he inquired: He desired that the Devil should take the shape of a Pronotarie; Satan therefore according to his wish, appeared to him in the form of a Pronotarie at the day appointed, and promised to tell him whatever he demanded ; He desires to know whether he should obtain the Pontifical dignity ? which when Satan affirmed, he moreover demanded, how long he should continue in that dignity ? To which question the Devil so answered, That Alexander understood him to promise the Popedom to him eighteen years, but he reigned only eleven years and eight dayes; the eleven years being expired, he falling into sicknesse, commandeth one of his servants to go into the upper Conclave, and bid him bring him the book that lay upon the Table, in which Magical Arts and incantations were taught; the servant ascending, and opening the doors, he finds Satan sitting in the Chair of the Pope, clad with the Papal ornaments : affrighted, with which Vision he returns to the Pope, and tells him what he had seen : The Pope hearing this, compells him to go again, to see whether the Devil did continue there; the servant coming thither again, found the Devil sitting in the same habit, who demanded what he would have of him ? The servant answered, That he came thither for the Pope's book. To which the Devil replied, What doest thou call the Pope ? I am the Pope. When the Pope being sick, by his Minister, heard these things, he was greatly afraid, and easily understanding how the case stood with him, by his own command he was carried into the inner Conclave, whither as soon as he was come, the Devil taking the habit of a Post-messenger, cometh and knocketh hastily at the door, and being let in, cometh to the Pope lying in his bed, and tells him, that the time was now expired, and therefore he must speedily depart this life : Whereupon there arose contention, whereby those who were present, understood the strife betwixt them, to be concerning the number of the years ; but Satan evidently demonstrating to him the reason, that the number of the years were expired, went away ; and in a very short time after, the Pope gave up the ghost.

309.

Gregorius Martinus told Martin Luther, 1538, a story much to be bewail'd, of a certain Virgin, that instead of tears, wept drops of blood ; being brought to that miserable condition, by the malice of an Inchantress, and that the Witch was present, though she took no notice of it when she poured out such tears ; He said, that it was not convenient that there should have been any delay or putting off the punishment hereof ; nor that Lawyers or Judges needed to hear any further testimony, evidence, or demonstration. Furthermore, he added as followeth ; Within these few dayes, (saith he) there was brought to me a Case concerning Wives ; a Wife did endeavour to kill her Husband by poyson, and when the Woman was examined by tortures concerning this matter, no confession of the truth could possibly be extorted from her ; for Witches remain mute, notwithstanding torments, which they nothing value, the Devil doth so dexterously stop their mouthes ; therefore when what they have done by witchcraft, convinceth the Witches according to this example, there ought such course to be taken with them, that the example may be a terrour to others.

to

IT was reported, that some years past a Magitian was suspended; but vanishing away when he was upon the Gallows, there nanged in his stead a bundle of straw. The same man having sold to one an excellent horse, did warn him, that when he rid him, he should not hastily go to the water with him. Wherefore the buyer, taken with a desire of finding out the cause, why the seller wished him to forbear bringing the Horse to water, forthwith (desirous to cause his horse to swim) rides into a deep River, when he came to the middle thereof, he perceived that he had nothing under him but a bundle of grass and Hay; Wherefore being in a most violent rage, he runs breathing as it had been for life to the house of the Witch, who perceiving the coming of his defrauded chapman, laying himself down upon a bench, counterefeiting himself to be asleep, the buyer rushing himself into his stove, seeked by hawling and pulling of him, to raise him from sleep; the Witch thought he would kill him at last, and therefore exceedingly affrighted, he gets up upon his knees, and runs away speedily. The same Witch did often sell to men, swine, which after they were bought, turned into bundles of straw; at last Divine Justice brought him to a deserved punishment at Nerburg, (with two women that were his complices) he and they, by diabolical tricks which they used, when they were not observed, stole mens goods, of which being at last detected, they were apprehended and cast into prison together; and a rich Woman, who was till that time reputed a Maïron of good conversation, was confessed by the women, to be guilty of the same wickednesse of stealing and fornication, which by their legerdemaines they exercised; and therefore she was likewise cast into prison; but the chief Magitian himself, though put to great torments, would confesse nothing; and when it was conjectured, his art, and spirit or familiar, was in the hair of his head, they cut away his hair. Whereupon he confessed all his notorious wickednesses, and after a few dayes, first the two women, and immediately after the Magitian, were deservedly hanged.

310.

THe horrid and much to be admired example of the power of Satan, which he sheweth by his cursed instruments, Witches, are fully demonstrated to us, in the book called, Malleus Veneficorum. And although the power of Sathan be great, and that God suffereth him sometimes to exercise his mischievous cruelty against some men for their sins and unbelief; yet sometimes also it pleaseth Almighty God, by the envy of the Devil, to try and prove his own dear Children; Nevertheless, we are assured, that their very hairs are numbred, and that not so much as one of them can fall to the ground contrary to his will: therefore we may easily arm our selves against the power and snares of the Devil, if we diligently beware and take heed of sin, and persevere firm and constant in faith and prayer. But because the Devil hath to this day shewed his greatest power amongst Papists, therefore I will declare some examples out of the foresaid book, by which it most manifestly appears how great the power of Satan is, and what inveterate envy and malice he hath towards mankind; He who desires to see variety of discourse to this purpose, let him peruse the said Author.

311.

312.

OF the filthy commixtion which Witches use with the Devil, it is a shame to tell; whosoever desireth to know how these filthy Plagues and beasts do commerce with the Devil, (whereby they have oft deformed births, and exercise nothing but Satanical deeds) let him, besides the foresaid Author, peruse Austin in his third book, and second chapter, de Cruitate Dei.

313.

AT Ratisbone one of two Witches which were burnt to ashes, being one that waited upon a Bath, confessed, that she was compelled by the Devil, to use several means to seduce a chaste young Virgin, the daughter of a certain honest and very rich man, to lye with the Devil; to which end the devil thought it his best course to invite the Virgin to his Chamber, upon an Holy-day, where he might talk to her in the shape of a young Gallant; which having often assayed, the Maid alwayes signing her self with the sign of the Crosse, his design was frustrate.

314.

ANother Virgin of the Diocesse of Argentum staying alone at her fathers house, upon a Sunday there came to her a certain old woman of the same Town, who after many scurrilous words which she used, she invites her to go along with her to a place where she should see all the handsomest gallants of the Town; the young maid overcome by the obscene enticing words of the old woman went along with her to her house, they were no sooner come to the house, but the old woman saith, we will go up to the chamber where the young gallants whercof I spoke of are, but take heed you sign not your self with the sign of the Crosse. The young maid hearing what the old woman said to her, as she followed her up the stairs, was struck with sudden fear, and therefore she signing her self with the sign of the Crosse, by prayers commendeth her self to Almighty God. Whereupon the Devils vanished; which the old woman perceiving, with a grim and devillish countenance, raging, and cursing the young maid, thrust her out of doors. Ibid.

IT was likewise confessed by this woman that waited at the Bath, who was formerly spoken of, that she was likewise deceived by an old woman, who brought her to the Devill in a way, to whom she prostituted her self, and that he in every respect, performed the office of a lustfull man, and was alwayes prepared for that; and that for eighteen years denying the faith, she served the Devill in diabollicall lechery.

315.

IN the Brixian Diocesse, a young man being inamoured with a certain young maid, much desired to have her to wife, but I know not upon what occasion altering his affection, married another, at the solemnization of the marriage, nor having altogether forgot his old love, amongst others, invited his former paramour, who refused not the invitation, and when the honest Matrons and Virgins offered their gifts, this impudent beast comes forth, and casting her hands towards the bride; saith to her, From this day forward thou shalt not enjoy one day of health. Which words, when they understood the levity of the impudent curtesan, they took no great notice of; but the Nuptials being ended, by the force of Inchantments, she lost the strength of all her members, and for ten years most miserably afflicted, she kept her bed, and then ended a most pittifull life.

316.

A Certain Earl of an illustrious extraction of the Westravien territories, bordering upon the confines of the Diocesse of Argentinnam, having married a Lady of an illustrious family, being by inchantments deprived of naturall strength, for begetting issue, could by no means understand the reason thereof. It happened that after he had been three years married, he going to the City of Menses, to expedite some businesse which he had, that he fell into the company of a certain woman, who for some years before his marriage, had been his Concubine, whom he distasted not for what had formerly passed betwixt them; nor did he suspect her concerning the Witchcrafts with which he had been afflicted; but kindly talks to her of their old love, which he was pleased to acknowledg, and inquires of her, her condition, and whether she were in good health; She perceiving the pity and goodnesse of the Earl, inquires of him, whether he were in good health, he answered, That he was well, and that all things succeeded happily and prosperously with him. She amazed for a little while was silent; which when the Earl perceived, he by gentle speeches, invited her to discourse; whereupon she inquires his Wives condition, he answered that she was well: She again asketh whether he had any Children by her. The Earl answered, I have had three Sons by her, she bare the one every year. Then as she stupefied, she was silent. Saith the Earl, then pray thee my dear, why dost thou so accurately inquire of the condition of me and mine, I do not doubt but thou rejoicest at my felicity: then, said she, I am heartily glad, but cursed be that old w

317.

man

man, who firmly swore that by her witchcrafts, she would make you unable to perform the rites of Marriage with your espoused Lady, the knowledge whereof the Well that stands in the middle of your Court will give you; in which an earthen pot is cast, being fill'd with enchantments; of which the old woman did affirm that so long as it should lye there, your power of rendring Nuptial rites should utterly be wanting, but I understand now, and rejoyce at it, that what she spoke was vain and frivolous. The Earl hearing these things, wisely dissembling the businesse, makes haste home and causeth the Well to be drawn or emptied of all the water that was in it, findeth the Earthen pot, which being burnt, he recovered his former strength and vigour. ibid. Concerning the manner how Witches use to take away the Members of men, read in the Book called Mallem Venificarum, cap. 7. p. 2. It is to be thought impossible that such members should be so occultly pulled or taken from the bodies, but by the legerdemains of the Devill.

318.

IN the Bressensis in the Basilienfis Diocess, a young Wench afterwards by means of her art, made one of the Society of Witches, she was brought by her Aunt (who was afterwards burnt at Argentina) to an upper Chamber of the house, where there were together five gallant young men clothed in green; then the old woman saith to the Maid, Chuse which of these young men thou pleasest to be thy husband; which when the young maid refused, she did most grievously beat and hurt her.

319.

IN the Basilienfis Diocess, a Priest of the Town of Oberweiler was of opinion, That there were no Witches in the World; and passing hastily over a bridge, he met a certain old woman in as great haste as himself; to whom he would not give the way, but threw her off the bridge into the mire; whereat the old woman much enraged, gave him bitter and contumelious language, saying; — Thou shalt not escape revenge for this; which words he regarding not, nor well understanding, went home, but in the night he was become so weak and feeble below his girdling place or middle, that he could not possibly rise out of his bed; so that he was fain to be carried by two, as oft as he went to the Church, or to visit the sick; after this affliction had continued for the space of three years, this old woman (whom he had not without cause suspected) falls sick, therefore she was advised to go to the Priest to confesse her sins; and although at first she refused, yet at length perswaded thereunto by her Mother, she was by two fellows carried to his house, and there confessed her sins to him, but made no mention of her witchcraft; her confession finished, she saith, Knowest thou by whom thou wast bewitched into this weakness? The Priest answered mildly, I know not; quoth she, Thou hast suspected me, and that not without cause, I brought upon thee the evil that thou art afflicted with for that thou didst cast me off the bridge into the mire, but my departure out of this World is now

now at hand; I will therefore cause that within a few dayes after my death, thou shalt recover thy health; which happened accordingly, for according to the time for which she had contracted with the Devill, she died. And within thirty dayes after, the Priest recovered his former health and strength.

IN the Lausaneſian Dioceſſe, a certain Witch cauſed the Family of a neighbour to be plagued with a grievous barrenneſſe, not onely all the beaſts and cattle, and other domeſtick living creatures were unfruitfull, but the wife of the family, by the Witchcrafts of this fellow, being made unfruitfull alſo, had ſeven untimely birchs: when at laſt the Witch was taken and examined, he confeſſed that in a hole digged under the threshold of his dore, there lay hid a ſerpent, which as ſoon as removed, the miſery of barrenneſſe would ceaſe, which as ſoon as ever it was effected, fruitfullneſſe was reſtored to the whole family. ibid. cap. 6. 320.

THE Wife of a great man, in the Town of Reichſbaffen, being with child, got to her houſe, ſome weeks before the time ſhe expected deliverance, a Mid-wife. There was in the ſaid Town a famous Witch, of whole company and diſcourſe, the Mid-wife adviſed the Gentlewoman who was great with child, to take ſpeciall heed; but after ſome dayes, ſhe for recreation ſake, went to the Caſtle, and met with certain women come together to a feaſt, where this Witch was alſo, who touched or ſtroaked the belly of the Lady with both her hands, as it had been in the way of ſalutation. Whereupon, ſhe preſently perceived her young one to move in her Womb with great pain and grief, whereat wonderfully affrighted, ſhe returns home, and tells the Mid-wife what had befallen her, who with a ſad countenance, cries out, We have loſt the child; which came to paſſe accordingly, for ſhe had an untimely birth, and that in ſuch manner that at one time ſhe was delivered of the head of the child, at another of the feet, at another of the hands, and ſo of the reſt. Ibidem. 321.

IN a certain Town of the Argentinenſian Dioceſſe, one whole name for modeſty ſake I conceal, had at his houſe one of his Tenants cutting wood, whom a Cat of a vaſt magnitude at unawares ſet upon, which when he had driven from him by blows, another more fierce joyneth to the former, againſt whom, whilſt he more ſharply contends, a third comes, ſo that at firſt he was put to a ſtrait, being forced to uſe the utmoſt of his ſtrength againſt three ſuch maine and cruell Cats, neither could he drive them away, and free himſelf from them without the receiving of many hurts and wounds; which Combat being finiſhed, the man falls to his work, preſently two Serjeants, apprehend him and carry him before the Judge, who being exceedingly moved with rage and fury, commanded them to caſt him into an ugly priſon, his groaning and often ſighings, nothing availing him for clearing or making manifeſt his innocency, and 322.

and the Judges anger did daily encrease exclaiming against the wicked fellow (as he called him) who would not acknowledge his villanous doings; after three dayes were passed, upon the often importunities of others, the Judge sends for him to the Senate to receive his judgment, when he was come to the Senate, the enraged Judge could not with patience look upon him; he (poor man) falleth down upon his knees, and humbly begged that he would hear him speak for himself; the Judge sadly laid to his charge that he had grievously wounded the three chief Matrons of the Town, and yet was so impudent that he denied the wickedness which he had so villanously perpetrated within a few dayes past; which the poor wretch hearing, answered, that he had never hurt any Woman in all his dayes: the Judge on the other side thundered out, that it was notoriously known, that he so hurt these Gentlewomen, that they lay in their beds with all their members and parts of their bodies so out of joynt, that they were not able by their own proper strengths, so much as to turn themselves from one side to the other; he again denies that he ever hurt these gentlewomen; But saith he, I well remember, that upon that day whereon I was apprehended, and, for that cause, was cast into prison, I being set upon by beasts, used all the vigour and strength I had to quit my self of them and drive them away, which words amazed all that were present. They enquire by what beasts he was set upon, then he declares all that was done very orderly. The truth being thus discovered, the Judges seek what they can to hush up the businesse, and procure what silence they could for the preservation of the honour of the Matrons.

323.

IN the Basilienſian Diocess, in the Confines of Lotharingia and Alſatia, a Gentleman of great fame did inveigh against an old woman with somewhat bitter language; who thereby enraged, determined to take most speedy revenge of him, as she said; which threats he little valued; yet the very night after there arose a blister in his neck, which when he scratched, it overspread his whole face and neck, and an horrible form of Leprosie made ugly his whole body; being in this condition, and suspecting the Witch guilty of lochantments, he sendeth for his friends, with whom he might best advise and take counsel, and declares the whole businesse, especially the threats of the old woman. What need is there of many words? the woman is taken, and being exercised with torments, and examined, confessed the fact; and the Judge inquiring diligently into the manner and cause; saith she, I boyling with revenge for the contumelious words which he spake against me, returning home, met there with a maligne spirit, to whom inquiring of me the cause of my grief, I told the whole businesse, and sought to him for revenge; whereupon the Devill asked me, What evil I desired to be inflicted upon him? I answered, I desire that his face may be so blown up, or swelled with a continual rumour, which may make him most ugly to behold: Saith Saith the Devil, going from me, I have already struck him with a more loathsome plague then thou desirest; which when she had confessed, she was deservedly burnt to ashes, Scrup. Part. cap. 11.

IN the Constantiensian Diocess, betwixt the Towns of Brisacum and Friburgum, a leprous woman told to many auditors, that she falling out with another woman, and many railing words passing betwixt them; as soon as she came home, a sudden wind blowed upon her which came from the house wherein the woman dwelled (opposite to her) with whom she had contention, with which she conceived she was so struck, that she was thereby infected with a Leprosie, whereof she could never be cured.

324.

IN the same Diocess and Territories of the black woods, a hangman lifting up a Witch from the ground by a pole of wood, the turning her self towards him, saith, I will give thee thy wages; and together with these words blowing on the face of the hangman, she infected it with an ugly Leprosie, whereof he dyed within a few dayes after.

325.

AN honest woman of Oenipontus, returning home from a Garden, she had adjoyning close to a woman-neighbour, and having perceived that this neighbour of hers came oft into it, but suspecting her a Witch, durst not so much as reprehend her for it; yet she of her own accord, without any provocation of the honest woman, meeting with her, with brazen-fac'd impudence flying into the very face of her, saith, Thou suspectest that I often passe thorow thy Garden. To whom the other woman, fearing to brawl or chide with the Witch, answereth pleasantly onely in these words; Your paths in the grass declare what trespass you have done me. Then the Witch, much troubled that she could procure no occasion to brawl with her, went away murmuring; within a few dayes after, the other woman was afflicted with most immane griefs of her belly, and most acute gripings in both her sides; insomuch, that she was not onely afflicted with continual pains, but did also disquiet all her neighbours, with continuall pitifull cryings out and lamentation; and when multitudes who came to visit her, that (if possible) they might relieve and comfort her, amongst the rest, a Potter comes, to whom the witchcrafts of this woman were well known, and perceiving the cause of her sickness to be no other then Inchantments, he commanded the Husband of the afflicted woman to search, whether he could find under the threshold of his door any enchantments; where amongst many other witchcrafts, was also found a waxen Image, about the length of an hand, which being bored through, had two pins fastned on both sides, the one right over against the other; which witchcrafts being removed, and cast into the fire, she was freed from those most grievous gripings, cap. 12.

326.

327.

AT Zabern in the Argentineſian Dioceſs, a Witch, being a midwife, came to a certain honeſt and godly woman, offering her ſervice near the time of her delivery, who knowing her infamous by her witchcrafts, diſmiſſeth her with pleaſing words, ſeigning, that her pains, when time ſhould require, would be very acceptable to her; but when the time came, neglecting her, and making uſe of another Midwife, which ſhe ſent for, ſhe conceiving in her breaſt the feminine flames of anger, eight dayes after the birth, in the night, with two women cometh into the Chamber of the woman that lay in, and maketh haſte to her bed; whercupon the woman in child-bed endeavouring aloud to call upon her Husband, finds her tongue and all her members ſtupify'd. Then the Witch ſtanding in the miſt between two women, ſaid, Behold, this ſcutvy creature ſcorn'd I ſhould be her Midwife; but I'll be reveng'd of her. The two women that ſtood on each ſide of her, interceded for the woman, ſaying, They never knew or heard any hurt by her. But ſhe again thus broke out paſſionately, Be- cauſe ſhe hath vexed my Juſtins, I'll vex hers; but for your ſakes her pain ſhall be ſuſpended for half a year; and then, purſing her hand upon the woman's belly, her guts appear'd to come out as it were, and the Witch roll'd ſomeſting into them; afterwards, the women being gone, the child-bed woman being come a little to her ſelf, call'd her husband, and tells him the whole buſineſſe. He comforts his wife, and bids her be of good cheer, for theſe were but vain terrors, and ſuch as women in child-bed were uſually infeſted with. But ſhe answered, O ſhe threatned I ſhould endure this miſery after half a year, but if now they are gone, I find no more hurt by it. I will reſt confident upon thy opinion. She had alſo an Arch-deacon to her ſon, to whom ſhe reveal'd the buſineſſe. When the fix months were over, ſhe began indeed to be moſt grievouſly tormented with pain in her belly, to that ſight nor day ſhe could take any reſt, but continually groan'd and ſtrick'd out moſt miſerably. Nor in all theſe torments did ſhe forget God, whom ſhe ſtill implored for his aſſiſtance, and who heard and delivered her. For on a day when ſhe went to ſtool, all that filth came from her. Then ſhe call'd her Husband and Son, and ſaid, Now I hope you are convinc'd, it was no vain imagination that I told you of; who ever ſaw me eat thorns, ſticks, and bones? For theſe ſhe ſhew'd them Roſe-briers a hand length, then ſticks and bones, and other rubbiſh, whereby ſhe was ſo tormented. [Ibid. cap. 3.]

328.

The Devil had ſollicitated, and wholly aſted certain Witches, that they devoted even their own Children, or any other In- fants they could come by, to him the Prince of Devils, with hor- rid execrations; which cruelty of theirs was thus detected. When a certain Witch deny'd all help at the time of her travail, but on- ly of one daughter of her own; her Husband wondring at the thing, thing, hid himself in the house, that so he might find out the mystery, and by that means saw the horrid rites of both the sacriledg and oblation. He saw the Infant, held up by no humane means, by the impulsion of the Devil ascend up the chimney by the Por-hooks, looking with an ugly Satanicall look; the Mother in the meantime calling upon the Devil with her usuall diabolicall rites and acclamations. Which when the man saw, (to his amazement) he was very earnest to have the Child christened without delay; and taking with him some neighbours, and his daughter who carried the child, for the next Village he is bound in all haste, where the Parish-Church stood; and having as he went along, told two of his neighbours of the businesse from first to last, when they came to a bridge they were to passe over, he drew his sword, and putting it to his daughters breast, vow'd she should there immediately dye, if she did not convey the child over the River without humane power; for I will not have him go (sayes he) over the bridge, but of himself let him be convey'd immediately to the other side. And when the good woman wondred at this rigour in the man, and sought to perswade him, he yet insisted upon his demands the more resolutely, untill he forced his daughter to call up the Devil, and make him convey the Infant over the River without any visible means. The Child being baptiz'd, he having sufficient testimony against his daughter, when the time of purification was over, accus'd wife and daughter, who being brought before a Magistrate, and convicted of that most impious crime, were both deservedly burnt. [Ibidem.]

IN a part of Suevia, a Country-man walking over his ground to see his Corn in a dry season, with a little girl, a daughter of his with him, wished that it would rain a good shower. The Maid hearing her father say so, out of her childish simplicity told him, She could easily procure that for him. The Father wondring at the childs words, askt her, how could she do such a feat? O, (sayes she) I learnt that of my Mother: and added, That she could easily cause it not onely to rain, but hail, and raise a great tempest, and that her mother learnt it of a Master she convers'd with; and that whensoever and whatsoever she requir'd of him, was presently perform'd; but that her Mother had strictly charged her to tell no body. The father being terrified at these things, askt her if she had ever seen this Master. The girl answered again, that she had seen many come in and go out, who her Mother told her, were their Masters and Loving Lords. Her father again demanded, if she could just then raise a shower or storm? She reply'd; I, if she had but a little water: He therefore brought her to the River, where calling upon this Master, she presently caus'd it to rain in her father's fields alone, and not in his neighbours, as he had commanded her. The man seeing that, bid her also make it hail, but so, as but in one field which he shew'd her; this she presently effected. And then being fully resolv'd his wife was a Witch, he brought her before a Magistrate, there convicted her of the crime, and burnt her; his daughter being put to holy exercises, and by sacred means, was delivered from the power and wiles of the devil. Ibid.

330.

IN the Town of Fack, a Judge commanded his Serjeants to apprehend a Witch, and bring him to execution: but they were so annoyed with loathsome stinks, and struck with such a terror in the business, that they utterly despaired of effecting it. The Judge (his name was Peter) insisting more earnestly upon the performance of his command, again exhorts them, that they would take courage and lay violent hands upon the Witch, for now the appointed time was come, wherein the detected crimes of this impious person must be punished; by which encouragement, being animated to repel the fascinations of the devil, the Witch was taken, and brought to execution.

331.

AT another place when a Witch was bound and brought to the Gallows top, she spert in the face of the Hangman, and he presently fell down dead; in like manner she did by a second. But the third going about a little more warily, was yet so invenom'd by her breath, that all his face swelled till he was stark blind with it; and a little after, he died of it.

332.

WHat power the Devils have to afflict Brutes, Cattle, and all other creatures, and how they can raise storms and tempests, you may find sufficiently laid open in the 14. & 15. chapters of the forecited Author: the examples are very horrible, nor do I think it necessary to commemorate any more of them. The History of Job will evidence the same thing, what is not only the power, but how extreme the malice of that evil Spirit.

333.

THERE were two brothers, to whom their Father left a competent estate when he died, the one of them took upon him a Monastick life, the other married, and set up a common house; and most earnestly gaping after Riches, used all means possible to defraud, not only his guests, but their beasts by false weights and Measures; and conveying their provender from before them. Whilst he thus strove to be rich, his estate went to wrack on every side, and the more he took care to heap up, the more and greater losses he sustained. When his brother the Monk came to him to part the estate with him according to his Fathers Will; he desired his brother that he would forbear prosecuting him for the division of the goods at present, for he was poor and in a very low condition and notwithstanding that he used all means possible for the gaining of an estate, yet all the fraud he could use profited him nothing; when the Monk heard this, he said; O my Brother, if you order your Family so unjustly, 'tis no wonder that things go so ill with you. For you keep such a guest that consumes all, and more than you

you can possibly gather; and if thou wilt see him, follow me into the bottom of the Cellar, and I will show thee who consumes thy estate. Whether when they were both come, the Monk by his adjurations, made the Devill that lay hid there, show himself to his brother. And presently a beast of an immense bignesse, and so fat that, without much ado, he could not move himself, appeared, which when the Monk saw, he said, O what a gainfull Inne dost thou keep, and turning to his brother, said, Behold that beast thou hast pampered by thy fraud, for whatsoever thou fraudulently gottest from any man, this ugly beast devoured. Therefore hearken to me, Be faithfull and upright in thy dealing towards all men, use an equall measure, and defraud no body; and after four years I will come again, and then divide my Fathers estate with you. His Brother followt the Monks counsell, and as much as he went backwards in the world before, he now came on, and in a short time had such experience of divine goodnesse, that he was Master of a great estate. At four years end, came his brother the Monk, to see what conditio his brother was yet in, who received him with great alacrity, and told him he had followed his advice, desiring to see the beast now again, in which the Monk gratified his brother, and commanded the beast that lay hid in the Cellar to appear, which when he came was so lean, his bones would scarce hang together. Then sayes the Monk to his brother, now it's time for this guest to get hence and seek another Host. But if thou shalt hereafter order thy affairs with the like Justice, thou shalt alwayes learn experience of the great blessing of our great and good God.

NOf long since, sayes Rodrigus in Wallis (which is a name of the Suburbs of Londonum) a certain Witch by her enchantments, freed a woman from her disease, who was most grievously afflicted, and thus she effected it. Falling down upon her knees, and looking towards the ground, she called upon the Devill very often, and with a loud voice, that he would cure the Woman; and pronouncing certain strange words, gave her a morsell of bread to eat, and by this means the woman recovered. Which kind of cure is plainly such, as if the sick woman had prayed to the Devill for health, than which it were better to indure the most painful death. Demonomania, lib. 1. cap. 6.

334.

I Remember about 20. years ago, at Lutetia, in a Noblemans house there, I saw a young man by often reciting certain French words in the presence of many honest people (which I think not good to mention at this time) make a scive dance, and move at his pleasure. And that he had a Familiar to help him is manifest, for that when he was gone, and another repeated the very same words, he could effect nothing of that nature by it. Idem. Lib. 2. cap. 1.

335.

336.

NO Country-man (sayes the same Bodinus) is ignorant, that if two Verses out of the Psalms be recited while the Milk is a churning, there will no butter be produced by any Art. I was at Chillis of the Palestins, when a boy standing at the maids heels, hindered the butter to come or gather: but the threatening curses from God upon him, if he did not cease and remove his Verses, made him speak somewhat preposterously, and backwards as 'twere, and then the Butter came after she had spent almost a whole day about it. If you put but a little Sugar into the milk, it will make no butter; for this proceeds from an antipathy in nature, and by the same reason, if but a little Cyprian-brasse be cast into a Furnace of Iron it will never melt, but turn to ashes, and therefore the Forge-men when they kindle the fire, see that there is none in the Furnace, nor any one near the Chimney.

337.

THere is a diabolicall art called Saxumquiescer, or Ring Magick which is performed by putting a Ring upon a bowl of water. This a famous VVitch, an Italian born, used at Lutetia in the MDLXI. year of Christ, muttering out with all some kind of words, and by this conceit, gave answers aright to some that consulted her: but most were deceived by it. Joachimus Camerensis tells us that Hieronymus the Stage-player, whose son became Chancellour of Mediolanum, had a ring that spoke, or rather a Devill speaking in a Ring, which rightly rewarded the Master of it at last, for it caused him to be excommunicated and cursed. Bodinus, Demonom. lib. 2. cap. 1.

338.

IOnce saw a Physician of Totofa exercise Palsuaria, or rod-Magick, and with a low voice murmur out some (I know not what) words, till the two ends of the rod met, and touch'd each other. But when it profited nothing to the cure of the affected, he blamed their incredulity, and cutting it into pieces, he caused it to be put about the necks of those that had the quartane Ague, for their remedy. Ibidem.

339.

OF all wicked devices of this nature, none arrive to that community and perniciousnesse, as that of restraining new-married people doth: This the common people call the binding of the Ligula, which boyes practise with impunity, and with high impudence, some bragging of it. Nor is this a new thing, for we read in Herodotus, that Amasis King of Egypt was so bound in this nature, that he could not have to do with his VVife Laodice, till with exorcismes and solemn prayers he was freed. Paulus Emilius also testifies in the life of Clotarus the second, that his Concubines used this trick against Hermamberge. Some Epicurean Philosophers laugh at this miracle, because these Artists in knowing the Ligula that are abroad, make people wonder when they see that they can by no means cure the same. And therefore the Canon sayes thus, If at any any time by Witchcraft and sorcery through the hidden, but alwayes just Judgement of God permitting, and the Devill preparing them, thy copulation is hindered, repair to God by humble confession. Out of which place we may note four or five Axioms, or undeniable positions. First, That copulation may be hindered by Witchcraft, which all Divines unanimously confirm, and Thomas himself upon the fourth book of Sentences, in the 24th distinction, where he saith; That a man may be restrained in that particular, as to one woman, but not otherwise; and in his last chapter of Frigid things. The second is, That it is done occultly, but by the permission of God in just Judgement. The third, That it is performed absolutely by the Devill. The fourth, That in this case God is to be repaired to in Fasting, which last head is chiefly to be observed, least those that are troubled with these things (as many do, and as the Devill desires and intends they should) run to Diabolical means for remedy.

Especially it is strange, that little boyes by pronouncing some words, should be able most exquisitely to perform this enchantment. I remember Ricew, general Embassadour to the Blesses told me, that a little boy was seen tying this knot under his hat, whilst Matrimony betwixt two was celebrated in the Church, and that the boy being seized on, escaped with the knot. Whilst at Pithavium I acted as Vice-Procurator in the year 1567, there was brought a case before me of this nature; which when I told to my Landlady, a very venuous woman, she (as it most skill'd in that Art) in the presence of Jacobus Bauvassus an Attorney in the cause, declared there were above fifty wayes of tying this knot, whether to tye a married man, or a woman onely, that the one despising the other's infirmity, might run after adultery, but that the man for the most part was bound, but seldom and hardly the woman, and that they might be bound for a day, a year, or ever, or for as long as the knot should last, unless it were dissolved. That there was a knot, whereby one might be brought to love another, and not to have reciprocal returns, but extreme hatred; and that there was another way to make two love one the other most affectionately; but if they came to lye together, that they should scratch with their nails, and beat one the other most inhumanely. As I heard at Ibolsa, there were two thus ligated for three years space, and then reconciled, and had a very fine child. And (which I most admire) the woman whilst she was ligated, declared she had hircle rumours like waets rose upon her as signs of children she should have had, but for this ligature. She said, there were knots to be made to hinder procreation, and not hinder copulation, that there were men could not be ligated, and some that might before marriage, and some after; but those few, and the Urines of men might be stopt by this trick, whereof they were not few that dyed. I found a poor boy almost dead with this thing; and the man that did the feat, lool'd again the knot, and so gave gave his urine vent. And not many months after, this very Sorcerer dyed of a like figure.

341.

THis mischief proceeding to a community in the Countrey of the Piſts, the chief Quæſtor of Niortum, when a new-married wife accused a Neighbour of hers for restraining her husband, in the year of the VVorld, 1560, he caused her to be cast into a very loathsome prison, threatening her she should never come thence till the man were loosed; and after two dayes the imprisoned woman gave leave to the married people to enjoy each others bed; and when the Judge heard the man was freed, he freed the woman from prison.

342.

THis is worthy our observation, That it passes the skill and power of the Devil; or any of his Agents, to restrain mens senses, or bind others from eating or drinking, by intercepting their power or stomach; or deprive a man of the use of any member, save only that secret one, and sign of our virility, which in Germany they often deprive men of, by making them run up into their bellies. Sesprengerus tells of a man of Spira, who when he thought he had lost his premises, sent for Physicians and Chirurgeons to search for them, who found no scar or wound at all; therefore he repair'd to the VVitch he had offended, and appeas'd her, and so was cur'd. Also a Citizen of Ratisbone furnishes us with another example, of one who violently laid hold upon a VVitch, and threatening to strangle her, compell'd her to loose him from that nodus. All these Boetius relates in chap. 1. of his second book.

343.

In Salanar, Abbot and Lord of the Nozalians, who now is sent Ambaſſadour to Constantinople by the King, and Polonus (who is also called Fruniskus) Ambaſſadour for France, told me, that one of the greatest Kings of the VVorld being very desirous of the knowledge of the number of his years, and the time of his death, sent for Jacobus, a Sorcerer, who when he had ended Masse, and consecrated the Host, commanded a first-born son, or man-child of ten years old, who was provided for the purpose, to be beheaded presently, and putting the head upon the Host, pronounced certain words, and inscribed some characters not necessary to be known by us; Then he ask'd the head, what he would have, which answered only two words, I suffer violence. At this the King was enraged, and cryed, Take away the head; and presently in that fury dyed. This story is very common in the Countrey, wherein it was acted, and very certainly reported, although there were onely five persons present at the thing. These things thus writes Boetius.

Johannes Charterius, that wrote the History of Charls the VII. tells us how one Guilbelm. Edelinus, a Doctor of Sorbon, was condemned for Sorcery upon Christmas Eve, in the year, 1453, who confest he had often in the night-time been carried abroad to a great meeting of Magicians, where he alwayes renounced God, and ador'd the Devil in the shape of a Goat, kissing his posteriors. 344.

A Certain poor man, when his Wife often went forth in the night, and forth would remain the man knew not where, making for her excuse to him, either that she went to stoop or bath with her neighbours; wherein when he had often disprov'd her, he began to suspect her chastity, and threatened to kill her, unless she directly told him where her haunt was. She being terrified with the sense of present danger, told the matter plainly, as it was, in every particular; and furthermore, that he might experience the truth of what she said, promised him he should see, and go himself whither she used to go. And to that purpose giving him an oyntment, wherewith they being both anointed, and she having pronounced some words, the Devil immediately carried them from the Countrey of the Lochis, to the Burdegalenstan Sands (which are distant no lesse than fifteen dayes journey, or more); when the man saw himself in company with Magicians, Witches, and Devils, (in a humane, but horrid shape) a thing very unusual to him, and in a strange Countrey, he began to blesse himself, and say, Good God, where are we now? At which words the whole company vanished. Then he understood that he was naked, and was forced so to wander up and down the fields till morning, when he light upon some Countrey-man that set him in his way. And so making the best shift he could, he returned to Lochium, where he accused his Wife positively of all these things before the Magistrate, who commanded her to be apprehended: But she mitigating the businesse as much as she could, confessed the most part of the businesse, and acknowledging her fault, returned from her wickedness. 345.

Also some few years since, a woman of great quality at Lugdunum, rose in the night, and taking a gally-pot out of her closet, anointed her self with it, muttering some words withall; a stallion that lay with her that night, observing her, when he could not see her, rose to look for her; and when he found nothing but the gally-pot, taken with novelties and curiosity, he also, as he had seen her before, anointed himself with the oyl that was in it, when he immediately found himself to be amongst a great company of Witches and Sorcerers in the fields about Lotharingia, whereat he was much amazed. But in the first place calling upon God to assist him, the whole company disappear'd; and he, finding himself all naked, returned to Lugdunum, accused the Witch, who confessing all the businesse, was burnt for it. 346.

347.

A Thing of the same nature befell a Nobleman of Maldunum, who by some words of a Milner, together with the instigation of his own curiosity, was induced to go amongst a company of Witches to see fashions forsooth; but when he was among the thickest of them, an extream horror seized of him, insomuch, that although he did not invoke Divine aid, the devil said with a very loud voyce, Who is this that is so fearful? And when he sought to depart their company, the Witches all vanished. And when he returned, he intended to discover the Sorcerers, but they fled for their safety. Bodinus Daemonom. lib. 2. cap. 4.

348.

WE read in Paulus Grillandus, a Lawyer of Italy, a man very well experienc'd in the facts of Witches and Sorcerers, That there was certain Country-man not far from Rome, in the year of the world, 1526. who when he saw his Wife rise naked in the night to anoint her self, and that thereupon presently she was gone out of his sight, and could not be found in the house, the next day provided himself of a good cudgel wherewith to belabour her sides, untill she should tell him whither, and to what end she so conveyed her self last night, which she presently doing, he pardon-ed her, upon condition that she would convey him amongst her fraternity. She the next day anointed both her husband and her self, and then they were presently mounted each of them upon a Goat, and so presently brought amongst the muster of Witches. Now his Wife had forewarned the man, he should by no means name God or Christ, unlesse in scorn and opprobry to him: when they were thus in the croud, the wife appointed her husband to stand a little aloof till she had saluted the Prince of them, (who was most magnificently cloathed and guarded about with a great ring of men and women; all honouring and waiting upon this their Lord) and that by so doing, he should see the whole of the businesse. When they had done thus, they began a ring-dance, (which is now taken up among the Countrey-people) that dancing backwards, they might not see one the others faces: It may be to the intent they might not know, nor accuse one another, if perhaps they might be arraigned in the presence of one another, after: which Trisculanus did, to whom Charls the Ninth gave leave and liberry, that he might discover his fellows. He told him, being in a great assembly of young men, That there were many there that adored and worshipped a Goat in their meetings, and kissed his very posterious (or arse-hole in plain English, if you will have it so). Then by reason his back was towards them, he not seeing them, they danced together, and the devils copulated together in men and womens shapes. After their dancing, the tables were covered and furnished with meat; the woman then moved the man to salute the Prince, and sitting down with the rest of the company to the table, seeing the table furnished with meat, he called for salt; and when salt was brought to the table, before he tasted any thing, he he said grace, which being ended, presently men, meats, and table vanished away, and he was left desolate alone, being very cold, and not knowing where he was; As soon as it was day, he came to some shepherds, of whom being asked, Whether he knew where he were? He answered, That he knew himself to be, in the Beneventan Earldom, in the royal command of the Pope. These things were done a thousand miles from Rome, from whence travelling, he was forc'd to beg his meat and rayment, and at length coming home upon the eighth day after, poor and lean, he apprehended his Wife; by whom many more being accused, and confessing the truth, they were all hanged.

THere is in the same Author, in the year 1535, that a young Maid in the Dukedome of Spoleto, of the age of thirteen, said, 349.
that she was brought by an old woman into the company of Witches, and seeing the convention of them to be so wonderfully numerous, she cryed out, Blessed God, what meaneth this? which as soon as she had pronounced, all vanished away; and the poor girl, being found early in the morning by a Shepherd, told the whole businesse to him, who bringing her home, the Witch was accused by the Maid, and, being found guilty, put to death by fire.

THe same Paulus Grillandus in his Book de Sortilegiis writeth, 350.
that being invited by a certain Nobleman to the Castle of Saint Paul in the Dukedome of Spoleto, coming thither, he told him of three sage matrons, one whereof trusting in his promise that she might freely speak without danger, confessed that fifteen years since, she was brought by a sage old Woman into the company of Witches, where the Devill being present, obliged them by an oath to renounce God their Creator, Faith, and Religion, and to be faithfull to him, and that with their hands laid upon a book of most obscure writing, he also bound them to some solemn services to him in the night, and that they should whenever he commanded them upon Holidayes, or set dayes, come whithersoever he should conduct them; the Devil on the other side promised to them mirth and felicity eternall: she confessed further that at that time she killed four men, many Cattle, and brought much hurt to the fruits of the Earth, and if it happened at any time that she came not to their meeting, without she were able to give good reason for it, she was so vexed that she could neither sleep nor take any rest; when She came to their meetings, She heard the voice of a Man which called the Devill little Lord, and sometimes Mr. Martinus; and as soon as ever She had anointed her self with a certain unction, She mounted a Goat that stood ready at the door, and held by the hair and tail; by which Goat She was suddenly convey'd unto the great coverture of Beneventum, where She found a very great company of Witches and Inchanters. There when She had vow'd allegiance to the Devill, She dane't, sat at

Table, and last of all, every Devill concopulated with her, or him they had to their peculiar protection; and when they had thus done, every one getting upon their own Devills, returned particularly, with the same incredible swiftnesse that they came thither, and that also they did privately at home adore the Devill, when this was all confest, and compared to the confessions of two more there were many others accused who acknowledged the crime, and together with their oynments and powders, they were all burnt alive.

351.

Also in the third book of Tarquemadeas of Spain, amongst others you have this more modern story. That a Magitian being very importunate, at last perswaded a companion of his that he would be a most happy man, if he would but be of his Faith, and come to their meetings. And when he had given him his consent, he on a night took him by the hand, and speaking some words, they were both carried through the Ayre to a great company of Witches in which an incredible company of both men and women compassed a Throne, whereon sat the greatest of the Devills in the shape of a Goat, to whom all of them went to kisse en la parte masculia quarenta (which, to those that understand Spanisb, is those parts which are not fit to be named in Englisb). When this new-comer saw this, he said to his companion that he could no longer patiently behold these things, and presently calling upon God with a loud voice, they all disappeared with a great tempest and Whirlwind, and left him alone there, who was three whole years before he could reach his own country again.

352.

Bodinus also writeth, That Joanna Halveria, born at Verberium in the Countrey of the Compedoesians, did confesse, that by the decree of the Council, by the confirmation of the Judge Sansifianus his Mother was condemned to the fire, and that he being twelve years of age, was offered by his Mother to the Devil in form of a black man, with sable apparrel, boots and spurs, and a sword at his side, having a black horse at the door, and using words to this purpose; Behold my daughter, which I have espoused to thee; and to her, Behold thy Love, in whom thou shalt be happy. And that from that time she renounced God and her Religion, and that he lay with her, as men use to do with women, and she found no difference twixt him and other men, but that his seed was cold and that the Devil once asked her, Whether she would be grativated by him, which she refused, lib. 2. cap. 7.

353.

WE find in writing that at a great Sessions for examination of the Potabanian Witches, held by Andreas Ferlius the Kings Deputy over the Laodunensians, where divers were burnt, out of whose confessions some things follow. Margaret of Biemontinus Wife of Noeles Lavertus, walking with May his Mother the Munday next after into the convent at Franquifanum near Lognium, which which standeth in a Meadow, her Mother putting a Broom betwixt her legs, and speaking some words (here omitted) suddenly both She and her Mother were carried to a place where they found Joanna Roberta, Joanna Guillemina, and Maria the Wife of Simon Agnus Guilelma, the Wife of one Grasun, with whom were six Devills of humane shape horrid to behold, &c. And after some dancing with them, the Devils lay with them, and had to do with them; and that one that took her to dance with him, after he had saluted her twice, lay with her for half an hour together, and that the seed he spent was very cold. Joanna Guillemina assents with her in these things, confessing that it was very true, that at least half an hour they were in copulation, and that the seed she received was very cold.

VVE read also in the 16th book of Johannes Meyerus who most accurately wrote the History of Flanders, That in the 1459th year of Christ, there was a very great company of both men and Women burnt in the Town Atrebantium, who mutually accused one another, that they met in the night, danced, and lay with the Devill. Likewise Jacobus Sprangerus, and four of his colleagues also tell us, that from the mouths of many wise and good men, they have been confirmed that many Witches had at the stake in Germany confessed, and in particular at Constantia and Ratisbon in the year 1483, that the Devill lay with them after they had by his instigation denied both God and all Religion. And that not a few had repented, and turned off themselves from that wickednesse, and confessed that whilst they were Witches the Devill had often to do with them. It is written likewise that very many came, and freely acknowledged, though no man accused them, that they had been guilty formerly of commerce with the Devill being Witches, to these things Spangens adds, that Witches did very oft copulate with the Devill, in the sight of the Sun, or clear day, and did strip themselves in fields and Woods, and were often seen naked in the fields, and were sometimes taken by their husbands in the manner with devils which they conceiv'd to be men, and therefore they set upon them with Swords whereby they could do no execution upon them. Paulus Gralandus, a Lawyer of Italy (who knew very many Witches) doth declare in his book de Sortilegiis that he was commended by an Abbot of St. Paul's at Rome, in the year 1526, in the Month of September, to take cognizance of three Witches, who amongst other things, confessed that every forceresse had a particular Familiar to commerce withall, in the History of St. Bernard, we read there was a Witch who usually copulated with the Devill; her Husband not perceiving her, though he lay in the same bed with her.

354.

355.

IN the flourishing Garden of Antenim concerning Turquomeda of Spain. I found another History concerning a noble Spanish woman, who related that she was induced by an old Witch when she was eighteen years of age, and from that time she had to do with the Devil; which was burned alive, and unpenitent, being a Cerdenate. The same doth declare that another did repent, and was put into a Monastery. Adamus Martinus the Laodunensian Proctour of Confession, told me (saith Bodin) that he had a Witch of Biebra (that is a Village two miles distant from Laodune) in question, in the Jurisdiction of D. Boan, the Captain of the Vermandians, in the year 1556: who was first condemned to be hanged, and afterwards to be burnt; but she was delivered alive to the fire by the fault of the Hang-man, or rather the just Judgment of God, who did so demonstrate, that the punishment should be equal to the offence, neither was there any mischievous act that did more deserve fire. Therefore she confessed, that Satan (whom she called her companion) was wont to have to do with her, and that she did feel his cold seed.

356.

VW Hen I was at the great meetings of Pistavins in the year 1567. performing my office amongst the under servants of the general Proctour, I took two filthy and beggarly Magicians, which did beg alms at a rich mans house; who being denied, did cast in Witchcrafts, and all the household being driven into fury, died mad. Damotium, libro 3. capite 1.

357.

THere was a crafty Taylor at Lotetia a Magitian, who onely touching with his hand, did cure a Quartane Feaver, but he was in no wile cured that would not believe that he could cure him. And there was a certain Italian old woman at Audes curing diseases in the year 1573. who when she was inhibited by the Judge to cure any more diseases, called a Court of Parliament, her cause was pleaded Eloquently, and likewise Learnedly, by D. Johannes Baltruus, Lawyer to plead the cases of the Parliament; fellow officer with the Lord of Matrasus, and my Countryman; but it is proved that the means by which she cured, did disagree with nature, as with the Brains of a Cat, which is poysoned; the head of a Crow, and other such like things; which things do plainly convince, that it was not done by the strength of the excellent Oyl, or of the healthfull Oyntment (which many good men, and lovers of the poor do make) but by means beyond Nature, or by charms of healing.

358.

Jodocus Darmudanus doth write in Praxi crim. cap. 37. that there was a Witch at Bruga in Flanders, having the greatest repute of Holiness, because she could cure innumerable diseases, but first she did take care for this, that they should believe that she could cure them, afterwards she did make known fasting dayes, and commanded that Pater noster should be said divers times, and that they should go to Compostella at St. James's, or to St. Arnolds, but at length she was convinced of many Magicall charms, and deservedly punished.

359.

Johanna Harvilleria, which (as we said before) was cast alive into the fire, confessed that she cast in charms, that she might kill a man which had beaten his daughter, but he having excelled her witchcrafts, suddenly felt pain in his loyns, and his whole body. But when (as she was greatly renowned for the fame of her Art) it was told the man that the grief could not come to him from any other person, then she promised that She would work means whereby he should recover, and took him into her custody: to that end She did require it earnestly of the Devill by intreaties, and She did labour by many means (which it doth not concern us to describe) for his healing, which Satan answered it could not be done. And therefore She saying to him, that for that cause he should come no more to her, the Devil answered her, that he would not come. A little after the sick man died, and the Witch hid her self, but although she was hid, she is found, and suffered deserved punishment for her wickednesse.

360.

Bodin writeth that he saw a certain Arvernian Captive at Lutetia, in the year 1579, sometimes curing Horses and men, with whom was found a very large book, full of the hairs of Horses, Cartel, and other beasts of all colours. This man if at any time he cast his Charms on a horse, he consulted, and having the hair of that he did cure him, that he might deliver his Witchcrafts to another, but he took no money, and if he did take it, he affirmed that he did not care for it: And therefore he walked about in a very old Cassock, replenished with a thousand patches. But when once he had cast his Charms upon the horse of a certain Noble man, being asked, he cured him, transferring his enchantments upon the servant of the same man: he answered, those that came again to have him cured, that they must know of the Noble man, whether he had rather lose his servant, or his Horse? In which thing the Noble man being in doubt, and striving to be advised; the servant died, and the Magician was apprehended.

I heard

361.

I Heard from the Lord Turnerius the Aureliensian Counsellour concerning Hulinus Parvus the Aureliensian Materialist. This man by chance being deadly afflicted by Magick, did take care that a man should be sent for, (who promised that he would drive away all diseases, being suspected of the Magick Art) that he might cure him. But he answered that he could not restore health to the man, unless he should transfer the disease to his son then sucking. The Parent consented to the murder of his son, to observe the thing, that the malice of Satan might so much the better be discovered. The Nurse having called it to remembrance, fled away with the child, while the Magitian was touching his Father to cure him. The Father being cured by his touch, the Magitian doth require the child to be brought, which being not found, he suddenly cryed out, I am undone, where is the child? and when he was going away he had scarce put his foot out at the dore, when the Devill kill'd him presently, and his dead carcase was as black, as if any one had dyed it, with a black colour on set purpose.

362.

I Heard also (saith the same man) in the Judgment of a Witch at Nautes, (which was accused of casting of charms to her neighbour) that the Judges commanded that she should touch the woman that was troubled with the charm, which is done very often by the Judges of Germany in the Imperial Camera; she refused, but seeing her self to be compelled, she cried out, I am undone, and together touched the woman that was afflicted with the enchantment: she recovered, and the Witch being dead fell down, her dead carcase being condemned to the fire. I received the story from one of the Judges that was at the Judging of him.

363.

I Heard also at Tholosa, that a certain Student of Burdeaux, said to his friend, being very sick of a quartan, that he would give his Feaver to one of his enemies; but he answering, That he had no enemy; he said, Give it therefore to thy servant. At length, when it was a doubt of conscience to him to do it, the Magitian said, Give it me; Then the sick man consenting, the Magitian dyed, being oppressed with the Feaver; and the sick man revived. Bodin. lib. 3. cap. 2.

364.

But this is no news, and unheard of; For we read in Gregory the Turonensian, lib. 6. cap. 35. that the Wife of King Childebert, as soon as she heard that her son dyed by a mischievous act; in her feminine fury she commanded a great number of Witches to be apprehended, burned, and put upon wheels; which acknowledged, that the King's Son was killed by them, that they might save Mummo, a great Magistrate: Therefore Mummo being taken, and put on a horse, he said, That certain oyls and potions were given him by the Witches, to procure (as he thought) the favour of of Princes; and he commanded the hangman that did torment him, to tell the King, that he perceived no grief from him. Then the King commanded that he should be stretched on the wrack, and sharp points of iron to be put between the nails of his feet and hands, as it is the custome of punishment in the East; which was without the breaking of members; the pain was intolerable. After some dayes being carried to his men of Bordeaux, he dyed.

But Experience doth teach us, that a disease happening by a natural manner, not by witchcraft, cannot be taken away by Magicians. Quasitor Sprangerus doth bring an example; when he knew that there was a Counterfeit Magician among the Insprugian Witches of Germany, who seeing his poor neighbour to be most heavily afflicted, as if her bowels were incessantly pierced with swords: I will try, saith he, if thou art troubled with charms, and will cure thee. Then poured melted lead into a round iron thing with a hole in the midst, being full of water, and putting it to the sick woman, and uttering certain words, which it doth please me to conceal, he perceived certain Images in the hardened lead, by which he knew that she was afflicted with charms. This being done, he took the husband of the woman with him, and both beholding the upper post of the door, they found a waxen Image set up in honour of a victory, at whose two sides two Needles did stick, with other dust, grains, and Serpent's bones, all which he cast into the fire: But the woman, when she had given her soul for a pledge to Satan, and the Magicians, to whom she had gone for her health, was recovered.

365.

O Gerius Terrentius, a most learned Physician, when I was at Tholosæ, hired handsome houses, and situated in a very good place at Bursa, for very little; in the year 1558, because an evill spirit did trouble the Inhabitants of them, being not right owners; which he did no more care for, then Athenodorus the Philosopher, who durst dwell in a house forsaken by the Athenians, and the Inhabitants, because of an empty spirit: But when he heard that thing which he never believed, that he could not go to the Cellar safely, neither sometimes take rest, having admonished Lufitanus a certain Student, to be in the City, who did exhibit hidden things to be seen in the nail of a little boy, he caused that this Student should use his art: But a girle full of knowledge, said, That she saw a woman most exactly adorned with most pretious chains and gold, which did bear a torch in her hand to a certain pillar: and therefore Lufitanus answered the Physician, that he should take care that the ground should be digged in the Cellar at the pillar, that he might find the treasure. The Physician rejoycing, commanded it to be digged up. But when he thought the treasure was almost found, a whirl-wind arising extinguished the light, and going out of the vent of the Cellar, brake fourteen foot of the battlements of the walls in the neighbouring houses, part whereof fell together into the poach of the dore, part into the vent of the Cellar; part upon a woman carrying water, whose water-pot was broken. There was nothing ever after heard of the Spirit. Just after the day after, being more surely certified of the whole matter, said that the spirit carried away the treasure; and he wondered because it did hurt the Physician, who after two dayes related the History to me. These things were done on the fifteenth day of December, in the year 1558. the Heaven being fair and clear as it is wont to be in Halcyon dayes. And we at the same time saw thorough the battlements of the next house that were cast down, and the porch broken to the Shop. Bodin. Demonomania, Lib. 3. cap. 3.

366.

367. Melancthon doth bring a History very like to this: Ten men were overwhelmed by the ruine of the Tower Magdeburg, when they did dig to find treasure; which Satan had shewed them. Gregorius Agricola in his Book de Spiritibus subterraneis writeth, that at Anneberg, in that ruine, which is called the Town of Roses, there was a spirit in the shape of a Horse that killed twelve men, and made them withdraw from the mine full of Silver, which Magicians found by the help of Satan.

368. I Heard of a certain Lugdunensian, in the Temple of the Virgin Mary, that there was Compellanus of Lutetia, who with his companions revealed the treasure of Ancolius near Lutetia by Magick-Art: but when they thought to have the Chest in which it was hidden, it was carried away with a Whirl-wind, but part of the wall fell upon him, by which he was made lame for the whole term of his life. And when the Noribergensian Priest had found the treasure by the help of Satan, and long ago was about to open the box, the house was abolished with a fall.

369. I Heard also from a Lugdunensian practitioner in the Law, that he with his companions went in the night, that they might seek out a treasure by uttering Conjurations, and when they began to dig, they heard a voice as it were of a man, which was put on the wheel, most horribly crying to the thieves: so they were turned to flight: but evil spirits in the very same moment pursuing them, slew them even to that house from whence they came, and they entered it with so great a noise that the Host thought it had thundered, and from that time he swore that he would never seek after treasure. Bodin.

370. Bodin also proves by an example that forcerers can bewitch mens eyes, and move laughter, and make the spectators astonished concerning Trisulcanus that Magician, which said of a certain Curat, all the Parish Priests being present; See ye that Hypocrite, who feigning to bring a Register, doth bring play-papers! Then the Curate willing to shew that he brought a Register, he seemed to himself himself to have play papers, and whosoever were present, seemed to themselves to see papers, so that the curate cast away his book of account, and went away ashamed. But others coming a little after, gathered up the Register book, being freed from that like-hesse of Papers: by which thing it was manifest that Satan did delude men in many things, and also bind fast every ones eyes. For those which were not present at the former action, when the forcerer cast his delusions before the eyes of those that were present, did see a true book of account, when others on the contrary did perceive but an appearance of papers, &c.

THe Germanes being about to search, what Witch had made a horse feeble and decaying, did draw the bowels of another horse to certain houses, and not entring the gates, but a Cellar or Cave under ground, did burn those bowels. Then the Sorcerers which had committed that evil, feeling the pain of the Collick all within; She runneth straightway to the houses, where the bowels were burn'd, that she might ask for a burning cole; and her pain did cease. But if the doors were not opened, the houses were darkened, ringed with horrible thunder, and threatned ruine, unlesse those that were within would open the door: which Sprangerus writeth, that he observed, and saw in Germany.

371.

I Heard from D. Antonium Lonanum, the King's general Legate, that there was a Sorcerer at Ribemont, who having pronounced certain words, did discover another by a sieve. All the names of those that were suspected were brought, and when the name of that man who was in the fault was brought, the sieve did move uncessantly, and the Magitian accessary to the same fault, came, which being found, the Sorcerer was condemned. Bodin lib. 3. cap. 4.

372.

I Remember, that D. Bodin the King's general Procurator, sometimes related to me, When all his cattel remained in a Village at Moldena, that it was told his Wife, that a certain beast must be slain, which here it doth not please me to declare; and he ought to hang it with the feet upward under the threshold of the stable, with pronouncing certain words (which it is not needfull here to insert); this being done, there did none of his cattel perish. Idem. ibid.

373.

Johannes Martinus performing his turn of Ruler of Laodunum, declared to me, that when he was to try a Witch by the Authority of S. Proba, (for she had tormented a Mason with so great sickness, that his head did hang down almost between his legs, his body being crooked, which evill he did suspect to come to him from the forcereffe) the Judg having regarded it well, he commanded, that word should be brought to the Witch, that she by no other means could save her life, then by healing the Mason. And therefore she commanded a swathing band to be brought home by her daughter; she calls upon the Devill, casting her countenance on the ground she muttered certain charms before them all, and delivering the swathing band to the Mason, she gave commandment that he should be washed in a bath, and that which was shut in the swathing band, should be put into the Bath with these words: Get thou gone in the Devills name. She said that there was this and no other means of recovery. These things being done, the Mason was cured. But yet before these things were seen in the Bath, she being willing to know what was in the swathing band (which she had forbidden to be done) they found three little corns in it. But the Mason while he was in the bath, perceived as it were three great fishes in it, when he came forth of it, although they did seek them very diligently, yet neither the fish, nor the arm was found. The sorceresse was burned alive, and remained without repentance. Idem. lib. 3. cap. 5.

374.

375.

WE read in horto Antonii de Tarquamedia, lib. 3. of a certain Magirian, who said to a rustick man, whom he saw bitten by a mad-dogg. That he was one that delivered from harm, that he might not lose his life. And when he prick'd his nose thrice to let forth blood, he was cured.

376.

Carolus Martinus, Governour of Laodunum, being certified, that a poor woman in the valley (that was the name of the Laodunenian Spurbis) was bewitched by a Sorcerers her Neighbour, and taking pity of her, he threatened death to the Witch, unless she took away the disease from her Neighbour. She fearing, promised to heal her; and therefore she came to the beds feet, looked steadfastly on the Earth, joyned her hands, called on the greatest Devil with a loud voice; afterwards renewed her prayers, repeating some unknown words, and delivered a crust of bread to the sick person, which in the same moment began to recover. This being done, the Governour returning home, did appoint that she should be apprehended, and be burned as soon as might be; but she was not seen in those parts from that time. Idem. ibid.

377.

VV E shall bring a fresh example from an honourable man, President of Vetricus Francus, who was assigned to all the greatest meetings of Brusis, in the year, 1577. When we wanted his help, I did earnestly sollicite him, that we might assist each other in the publick burden, lest he should go out of his place before the States were dismissed; he answered, That he had a certain friend who lay sick to death, he was sent for by him, and was made his heir, he thenceforth was sick five or six years, his members failing him, and therefore his father being advertised, that there was a man in Flanders, who could cure his son, went hither presently: The Sorcerer unfolded the disease of the son (which he had never seen) to the Father, and sent him away into Lusitania to another Magirian (whose name he told him) living in the Kings Court.

Court. The Father bearing this patiently, went into Lusitania, where the Magician said to the Father (before he did onely proffer to speak) 3. Friend, thy son shall be cured in a short time; go into France, thou shalt find a certain man named M. Benedicium, towards Noviodunum, about 20 miles from thy house, (but there are many of the same name) this man shall cure thy son. And therefore the Father wondring that he should undertake so great travail, that he might seek that afar off, which was near, took courage, and went to M. Benedicium. But he said to the Father, Thou hast spent very much labour going into Flanders, and Lusitania, that thy son might be restored; Go, command him to come to me, I am he, that will heal him. The Father answered to these things: Now he hath not gone out of his bed for above these 5 years, and hath not truly the least faculty of moving in him. But at length, with no little trouble, the sick person was brought thither, and he was eased in part, but yet he was not long well. Idem. ibid.

Jacobus Sprangerus the Commissioner, to enquire after the crimes of Magicians, by the same argument doth write, that he saw a Bishop in Germany, who being very sick, he knew by an old witch, that he was sick by witchcraft; neither was there any other way to recover his health, then that the same witch should perish by enchantment, who had cast the charme upon him. The Bishop wondring, sent with all speed to Rome to the Pope Nicolaus, V. that he might get leave to be cured by this meanes. The Pope, which did love him singularly, did grant his request with this small sentence, that of two evils, he should flye the worst. The Letters Patents being brought, the Witch said, Seeing that it pleaseth the Pope and the Bishop, she would perform it. So in the middle of the night the Bishop was restored; but the Sorcerers which had bewitched him, fell into the same disease from which he was freed. But in the meantime, that Sorcerers, which dyed, would never consider, but uncessantly committed her self to Satan, to recover her health.

378.

IN the field of Poissiers in France, in the year 1571. Charles the eleventh King, after dinner commanded, that Triscalanus (whom he had pardoned, that he might disclose the partakers of his fault) should be brought to him. He confessed before the King, and a great assembly of his Nobles, the manner by which Sorcerers are conveyed, their dancings, sacrifices offered to Satan, detestable copulations with Devils, having shapes of men and women: Moreover, he added, That dust was taken by many, with which they killed men, cattel, and fruit. Every one admiring at these his sayings, Caspar Collignius, Admiral of France, (for he by chance was present) said, That a youth was apprehended in the field of Poissiers, some moneths before, being accused concerning the death of two Noblemen, he confessed, that he was their servant, and he saw them with dust cast into the houses, and the corn, saying these words; words: A curse on that fruit, on that house, on that Region: And therefore he having gotten this dust, took it, and cast it into the bed where those two Nobles did lye; so both were found dead in the bed, but swelling, and very black. The Judges did discharge the boy. Then Triscalanus hearing that, discovered also many things of that kind. But it may be believed, if the King (whose body otherwise had the strongest joynts and complexion) had commanded this Prince of Magitians, and his other followers, to be burned together, that God would grant a longer and more blessed life to him for these Judgments. For the Word of God is alwayes manifest unto him, that he who quitteth a man worthy of death, doth return his deserved punishment on himself; as the Prophet said to King Achab, That he, because he had shewed favour to a man that did deserve death, should dye. Ibid.

379.

380.

IT is manifest unto all men, that the man of Rochell, who was wounded to death, of whose health all Chirurgions did despair, was so ordered by the help of a certain Magitian, that he could walk and speak some dayes; indeed Satan, and not any other, did bear him, that he might shew his power to the Magitians. Ibid.

381.

Joachimus Camerarius doth declare in his book, de natura Demonum, When by chance a certain Butcher went by a Wood in the night, he heard a noise, and dancings; and therefore having sought the thing diligently, coming, he saw silver cups, which things, (as soon as the Sorcerers and Devils were separated,) presently the Butcher took, and the day after brought them to the Magistrate: so they, whose marks were in the Cups, did accuse others, being summoned to the Court, and were all deservedly punished.

382.

Here is another more excellent example of that execution, which was made at Piſſarivum, in the year, 1564. the history of which execution I learned as well from many in the same place, as also from Salvertus, President of the people of Poitiers, (who was then sent for to hear the Judgment with Daventonium the President of Poitiers, with other Judges;) and all in that region know it. Three men with one woman being Sorcerers, were condemned to be burned alive together, when they were proved guilty of the death of very many men and cattel; dust being brought to them, as they did confesse, by the help of the Devil furnishing them, which they hid under the ground of Sheep-cotts, and the threshold of houses. But they declared, That they were wont to go thrice to the greatest meeting, whither innumerable Magitians came together to a certain cross-way where Feasts are solemnized, which did afford them the use of an Image; there was before them a great black hee-Goat, speaking to those that were present with humane reason, that they should leap all into the circuit of his embracements; and then every every one with a burning candle kiss his hinder-parts: This being done, the Goat was consumed with fire, of whose ashes every one took, that therewith they might kill the Ox of an enemy; this man's Sheep; that man's Horse; that they might torment this man with febleness, that man with death. Last of all, the Devil with a terrible voice did thunder out these words; Revenge your selves, or I will. So every one did return by the help of the Devil the same way that they came. The President Salvertus, a most vertuous man, said moreover, that it did appear from antient acts; for Magicians were condemned for the same cause 100 years before, and by the like confessions; and that it was done in the same place at the same cross. Two of these did repent, and two dyed in their obduracy. Of others that were burnt, I have not heard.

I Read also a Judgment against the Sorcerers of Potezana, which Adrianus Ferreus the King's general Vicar imparted to me at baodunum. In it their confession is after this manner; That they hear Lognium at the Trenquifanum prison, certain words being uttered, were carried away with brooms, and there found others furnished with brooms ready at hand, and with them six Devils, whose names are kept. After that they had forsaken God, they being kissed, adored the Devils in humane shape, but yet having very bad countenances; and danced, having them in their hands: afterwards the Devils had to do with the women, but they required the dust to kill cattel: Lastly, it was appointed, that they should meet in the same place eight dayes after, on Monday at the beginning of night; and when they had tarried there three hours, they were carried back.

383.

Bovinus the Ruler of Gulick, being sent Ambassador to Biturgium by name, among the Blesensians; affirmed, that there was a Witch burned, he being Judge, whom her daughter accused, because her Mother had brought her to the meeting, and gave her to be instructed by the Devil; She among other wickednesses confessed, that she danced in the circuit of the Goat, and at length she related the several gestures of the multitude at the last time, and in what manner they made use of the dust. This man saith, that he had a child killed by her, another a horse; and he, a tree. But one being found to have done nothing from that time, received many strokes on the soles of the feet, and was derided by all others; She also added, That it did behove them to have fresh powder often. Bodin. lib. 2. cap. 4.

384.

A Thing like to this, is that which we read in the Judgment of another Sorceress, who confessed; That she could not rest, unless she did commit some evil daily, at leastwise she should break a little vessel; but when her Mistress caught her breaking her earthen vessel of purpose, then she confessed the matter, and 385.

was

was adjudged to dye, because she said she could by no means rest, unless she had killed a man, or committed a mischievous act.

386. I Remember, saith the same Bodin, That Thurpin a Learned man, an Aureliensian Counsellour, told me, That there was a speech all abroad, and found out true, that the convention of Witches was kept at the Cleriacus, and that Devils declared there, whatsoever was done in divers Nations, because they do reduce the several deeds of men, as it were, into a brief History of all person's actions; and this is the manner of divination which Sorcerers use. But that Sorcerers, whom we mentioned, would not stir from the sentence given, saying, She did prefer death before so great torments of the Devil, from which she could not be quiet even for a moment.

387. But this is to be observed in the first place, That there is no meeting, wherein there is no dancing. So the Witches of Languiana did sing when they were dancing, Har, har, Devil, Devil, leap hither, leap thither, play here, play there; others said, Sabbath, Sabbath, (that is) a quiet holy day, having their hands and brooms lifted upwards, that then they might certainly testify, with how great cheerfulness of mind and diligence they did worship and adore the Devil, as also that they might represent the worship which is due to God.

388. There is a fresh History of Naturall Witchcraft, by a Neapolitane, who doth declare a thing which he tryed in a woman-Witch, who after she had anointed her self naked, swooning, and void of sense fell down, and being returned after three hours space into her body, she related many things from divers Countries, which were afterwards found true.

389. I Heard from the Turettanian President, that he saw in Delphiratus a Witch which was to be burned alive, therefore she lying down in the fire, saying, Remain ye at home with my body, she was taken away in a trance, and because she understood nothing, her Master smote her with very heavy strokes of a rod, and then also that they might see whether she had departed this life or no, the fire overcame the parts which are most sensible, neither did they any further watch her; and therefore lying (esteemed by her Master and Mistis) dead, she was left there: she was found lying in her bed the next morning. Which when her Master admiring, enquired what had happened to her? She crying out, said in her own language; Ah Master! How have you beaten me? Her Master manifesting this to the neighbours, a certain man said, It is a Witch: and therefore her Master did not desist till she acknowledging the thing, did make manifest that she had heard the meeting of of Magitians in her mind. So moreover, she confessed other offences which she had committed, and she was delivered to the fire. Bodin, in Dæmonomania, lib. 2. cap. 4.

Jacobus Sprangerus the Quæstor, who did examine many Witches, doth write that they did confesse, when they seemed to be taken away by the spirit, yet it might seem otherwise in the body. We have had another example in our memory at Burdeaux, in the year 1571. when persecution was instituted against the Magitians of France. A certain old woman at Burdeaux being a Witch, confessed to the Judges, that she was carried with others; every week where a great Hee-Goat was adored, by which author they did deny God, and did promise that they would serve the Devill, every one did kisse his privy parts, and after they had danced each one did receive the dust. Then D. Belotus, master of the Bills containing supplications, (when the forcereffe said that she could do nothing, except she was brought out of the Prison) being willing to try the truth of the thing, did command her to be brought forth; and when she had anointed her self being naked, she fell down as if she were dead, and void of sense, afterwards coming to her sense and rising after five hours, she declared many things which were found to be so, as she had said in divers places. A certain Earl of the order of men of arms, did relate this History to me, who doth live yet, and was present at that experience. Olaus doth testify that it is frequent in the Northern parts, and that their friends do watch the body of him that is in a trance very diligently, untill with great grief he doth return; and bring with him his ring, letter, or knife, who is absent 300. miles. Idem, ibid.

390.

That judgment of seven Magitians is alike admirable, which I learned at Nautes in the year 1549. Therefore when they promised that they would shew before many, in an hours space, what was done ten miles in Circuit, they presently fell down dead, and did lye void of sense three hours: arising, they did relate whatsoever they had perceived in the whole City of Nautes, and a longer Circuit, having observed places, deeds, and men, all which things were found presently. And therefore all they being accused, and found guilty of many mischievous acts, were condemned to be burned. Idem.

391.

Baro of Razii (who at Nautes being condemned for his Magickall charms suffered punishment) not onely confessed, that he killed eight children, and deprived others of understanding, and sacrificed his own young son to the Devill, and that in her Mothers womb, that he might gratify Satan as much as it was possible, but also prostrating himself upon his knees in his chamber, did adore Satan appearing in humane shape; and did sacrifice with Incense to him. Satan did promise many admirable things to him; and namely, that he should be great. But at length seeing himself Captive, and oppressed with the most bitter evils; confessed all things, and suffered the uttermost punishment. Bodin. lib. 2. cap. 6.

392.

393.

VE read in Sprangerus, when he had intelligence of a certain sorceresse, which he condemned to be burned, that she confessed, (how she was a Midwife) that she taking children out of the Mothers Womb, did present them to the Devill by lifting them aloft into the Ayre; afterwards she put a great pin into their heads, so that the blood might not run out: then carrying them to be buried, going in the night she digged them up, boyled them in a furnace, did eat the flesh, and did keep the fat for her use. By this means she killed foure children: she was a Dane at Basilea.

394.

Cazereis was a Witch at Tholosa, who having brought the blessed bread to the Altar, went away to drown her self, and when she was brought home again; she confessed that she infected the blessed bread with poyson; the bread was cast before Dogs, they dye. She being in bonds, was in a trance more then six hours, void of all feeling; afterwards rising up, cryed out she was wonderfull weary, and sent back the Messengers from many places with certain signes and marks. When she was near her sentence of condemnation, and Judgment was ready to be past upon her, she called upon the Devill, saying, That he promised that there should come such vehement storms and showers that she might not be burned. But for all that she was not defended from the violence of the fire. Bodinus Demonoman. lib. 3. cap. 3.

395.

Nothing (saith the same Bodinus in lib. 2. cap. 5.) is so wonderfull and admirable as the Metamorphosing of men into beasts, and to be turned out of the shape of a man into that of a beast. Yet the truth is, that this is practised among Magicians; and both divine and prophane Histories do prove it certainly. In the book of Inquisitions against Magicians, which I have often mentioned; we read of one Statius a certain Magician that he suddenly and oftentimes flew, and escaped out of the Bernates field, out of the midst of his enemies (for he had very many) and he could never be slain; but when he was asleep, he left two of his Disciples Hippo and Stadlinus which were the chief Magicians in all Germany, who raised tempests, caused lightning and great storms.

396.

THere did arise a controversy in the Parliament of Dolensi, and the sentence was published the 18th day of January in the year, 1573. about Egidius Garnerius, Lugdunensis. Which Judgment is not fit to be inserted here at the present, when Aurelius at Eligium Giberium at Paris with Peter Hayanum, commended to the French Presses; only we will set down the chief heads of those Articles that he was accused and convicted of. And first, That this Gar-

nerius

namur Michael was tunc in the wood, in the Chapell of Sancti Vini, which are a quarter of a mile from Delph Town, took a young wench of ten or twelve years old, with his hands, which seemed like to Wolves feet, and tore her to pieces with his teeth, and so devoured the flesh of her thighs and arms, and brought part of her to his Wife. And about a Month after, he got another girl in the same manner, and killed her; and being about to eat her, he was hindered by three men (as he himself confessed) had hindered him. And about fifteen dayes after he strangled a boy of ten years old, in the Vine of Gredisanorum, and did eat the flesh of his legs, thighs, and belly. And lastly, He slew a boy thirteen years of age (being then in the shape of a man, and not of a Wolf) in a Grove of the Perris; and being very hungry (as he of his own accord confessed) if he had not been hindered, would have eaten him also. Therefore for these reasons he was condemned to the flames; The Sentence was put in execution.

There was another Case agitated at Vesentia, made known to, or discovered by John Baimi the Inquisitor, in the year of our Lord, 1521. in the Month of December, the cause was sent into France, Italy, and Germany, which Pierius, lib. 6. of Witchcraft, chap. 13. relates at large, but I will remove a few heads of it; Peter Borgatus, and Michael Verdunus, was found guilty, and confessed that they had renounced God and their Faith, and had given themselves to the Devill; Therefore Michael brought Borga in that street of the Calonian Castle, where each of them had a Candle of green wax burning, with a dull obscure flame; and so they danced and sacrificed to the Devill. Afterwards they confessed, that anointing themselves, they were transformed into Wolves, running with great celerity and swiftnesse; then again being turned into men, and a while after into Wolves, and in that shape had copulation with the Wolves, and had the same pleasure with them as they were wont to have with Women; Furthermore it was confessed, that Borgatus with seven Wolves feet and teeth, did tear to pieces and cruelly macerate a boy, and had quite devoured him had not some Countrymen driven him away. And that Verdunus slew a young maid gathering pease in the Garden, and was driven away by the Lord of Cune. And in the last place, that there were four young lasses devoured by them at a certain place and time, whose age they did relate, and that they could destroy men by casting a certain kind of dust or powder.

397.

I Remember that D. Bordinus, the Kings Generall Factor, or Solicitor, did tell me of another example that was sent to him out of Belgia, with the whole Judgment, signed by the Judges and Clerks and Notaries; which was concerning a Wolf that was wounded in the hanch or Thigh with a Dart, which afterwards being turned into a Man laid in his bed with the Arrow in him, and being plucked out, he that was wounded acknowledged it, this was proved at that time, and in that forementioned place, both by his own confession, and by divers other testimonies.

398.

392.

JOH. FINELIN writes, that at Palma there was one man, Tellinad, and his Wolfe kept him in Chiron, and when he appeared a man that was humped, of hind hindments, &c. on, by which example (saith Finelin) the Judgment against Witches is confirmed, and a great company of Witches in the shape of Cats were wont to congregate and gather to the Castle, and there were set four or five men, who were set to watch them all night, and then a great multitude of Cats did invade, and set upon them, one of them was slain, the rest were sore hurt, and wounded, but many Cats being out and hurt, afterwards turned into women, were found to be sore illast. But because the thing seems so incredible, the sentence and Judgment is mute and silent. Petrus Bearnardus in his book of divinations, saith, that he himself was an eye-witnesse of this transformation of Men into Wolves in Lubania and Henry Colonensis in his Vol. de lamiis of Witches, affirms it for an undoubted truth, and also Ulricus Molitor in his book which he dedicated to Sigismundus Cesar, setting down the disputation that was made before the Emperour, and proves by many reasons, and also by his own experience, this strange Metamorphosing of men into Wolves, and tells of one that was thus transformed at Constance, who was accused, convicted, condemned, and confessing it, was executed. This is showed in many books that are set forth in Germany, one of which relates that there was a Christian King who was lately deceased, that oftentimes turned himself into a Wolfe, that he might be the Prince and chief of Magicians. And the truth is, this kind of Witchcraft over-spread all Greece and Asia, and some of the Western countries, as our Merchants say, that there were some that were put in the stocks, and imprisoned, who turned themselves from the shape of men into Wolves. Therefore in the year 1542, Sultan Solyman, getting invested in the Empire, there was such a company of Wolves at Constantinople, that the Emperour was in arms marching against them with his Prætorian Souldiers, and compelled a hundred and fifty of them to fly, and vanish out of the City, all the people being spectators. Job Finelin in his second book de Mirabilibus, and the whole Country agree to this. The German call these Wolves werwolf, the French, Loups garous, Petrus Bearnardus, Edwardus, as if thou shouldst say, divers Wolves (for the French put G in the room of w) the Greeks call them lycaones, and lycaonias, the Latines, Verispelles, as Plinius (not Quintus) writing of this Metamorphosis. Pomponatius and Theophrastus, the chiefest Princes of Philosophers in their age, do confirm that certainly there was such a transformation of men into Wolves. Casper Peucerus, son in law of Phillip Melancthon, writes, that formerly these seemed alwayes but as meer fables and fictions to him; but at last he was forced to believe that which so many Merchants of good account and credit did confirm in Livonia, many being accused

cooled, convicted, and confounded, and so were executed, and therefore he lets down the manner which was observed in France: for every year about the end of October, there was a knowable fellow who did this up all the Magicians, that they might have a Congregation in such an appointed place, and if they did not appear there, they were corrected by the Devil with an Iron rod, so that the common rout were a great while after their Captain, who marching before, Millions followed to a certain River, and passing over it, they were transformed into Wolves, and would fall upon men and beasts, and brought great detriment to the Country: and twelve dayes after rowing again over the River, they reassumed the figures and shapes of men.

I Have oftentimes visited one Languetius Burgundus, a Learned man, negotiating about important affairs with the Duke of Saxony, and also with the King of France for his Lord and Master: here he told a story not much unlike to this; He said, That having some business with an old man in Leonia, the thing was known amongst the people, I have about me some letters of a certain German, who was a Pensioner of King Henry the second, written to the Constable of France, by which he certifies the Constable, the which Intelligence was given at Mosch in Leonia: and furthermore he adds, In those Countreys where Herodotus seems to place the Nurians, among whom there were those that could change themselves into Wolves, which was a common and usual thing in Leonia; many things which were related by Herodotus, seeming incredible, following Ages have found to be true. And the same Author saith, That there were Magicians, that by certain short sentences allayed that tempest in which Xerxes had above forty Ships sunk and cast away: And we read in Olaus Magnus, lib. 3. cap. 18. of the Lappi that could fell storms and calms, by unloosing some ropes, which all Mariners know by frequent experience.

400.

WE also read in the History of John Trilemis, in the year 1470, of a certain Jew, Bajanus by name, the son of Simeon, who when he pleased, could transform himself into a Wolf, and vanish out of sight, and made himself discreto, invisible.

401.

AND it is a wonderfull thing, and yet methinks 'tis more admirable, that many will not believe it, when people of all Nations, and Historians with one consent acknowledge and confesse it: not onely Herodotus hath written of it 2000 and 200 years since, and Homer 40. but Pomponius, Mela, Solinus, Strabo, Dionysius, Aster, M. Varro, Virgilius, Ovidius, and many other; and so Virgilius upon this, 402.

Has herbas, atq; hoc Ponto mibi lesa venena;
Ipse deas Moeris; nescuntur plurima Ponto;
Hic ego sepe lupum fieri & se condere sylvæ Moerin.

These

These horns and points call'd by the Stars given,
 Not a few fish the bristly branches have;
 By this I can assure a Wolf has been,
 Whose skin once over a dead tree had been,
 And hanging there, was a Wolf was hanging,
 Hiding my self, into these Woods ranging.

But Pliny, lib. 8. cap. 29. wonders, that Authors should agree about this. That men, saith he, should be turned into Wolves, and again revert unto their proper shape, we ought to esteem false, or believe all that which we find recorded in fabulous Annals; this he durst not affirm, fearing lest he should be believed; for among the chiefest of Greek Authors he bringeth Pausanias upon the stages, who saith, That in Arcadia, there was one of the Atrean Nation that did swim over a pool, and was transfigured into a Wolf, and after some few years coming to the same pool again, and when he did pass over it again, he received an humane shape. And Agrippa, who writ of the Olympionick games, telleth of one Demonaxus Partholus, who tasting of the intrals of a boy that was sacrificed to Jupiter Lycaon, was changed into a Wolf, which Ad. Parre, the most learned of all the Greeks and Latines, as Cicero testifieth, brings it in for an example, and confirms it for an undoubted truth. Olaus Aegynus speaking of the Countries of Phrygia, Narbonia, Fincladia, and Appenninia, saith, These are beastly Nations, and full of wicked spirits and conjurers; And in his History saith, That men are turned into beasts by them; And he that desires more examples, of which there are millions, (which for brevity sake we will omit) let him consult Olaus, the Saxo Grammaticus, Pinselinus, and William Brabantius; I passe by Ovid's Metamorphosis, who intermingled many true things with his fabulous stories; but that which he writes of Lycus, the Arcadian King, turned into a Wolf, is not incredible;

Territus est fugit, nullusq; silentis raris Simulat, frustra, loqui conatur.

Affrighted he did fly, run, howl, and walk,
 But oh alas, in vain he strives to talk!
 Obtaining silence in the Country there,
 As he was mute or silent every where.

Neither is that fabulous, which Homer relates of Circus the Witch, and of Ulysses's companions being turned into hogs, when St. Augustine in Civitate Dei, brings in the same History, (although wonderful, in his opinion) and he saith, that story of the Arcadians on the Alps was often in his mind; that many prating talkative women intrusted in wicked arts, would give something in their cheese to Travellers, by which incontinently they would be turned into cattel,

cattel, that they might bear necessary burdens; and then afterwards when they had done their work, come to themselves again, as we have shewed before, &c.

WE read of a like History to this in William the Archbishop of Tyre; Sprangerius the Inquisitor relates the same of a young English Souldier in Cyprus, that was turned into an Ass by a Witch; and when he would have swimm'd back unto the Ship where his companions were, he was beaten back by clubs, and went back to the Witch, and was by him so used, untill the Ass was seen in the Church to fall down on its knees, and to do those things which could not possibly be performed by any brute beast, or meer animal; then they apprehended the Witch which they suspected to have handled him in that manner, and brought her before the Judges; and after three years was past, he was restored to himself, and she was executed: The same we read in Ammenius the peripaterick Philosopher, that commonly there was an Ass ordinarily at the hearing of his Lecture.

403.

Nothing is more frequent and usual in Egypt, as our Merchants report, and Belonius in his Observations, printed at Lutetia, saith, That there was a Stage-Player, which he himself saw in the Suburbs of Cayxus, a Town in Egypt, who had a Dialogue with an Ass, and spoke with it, and discoursed with it very familiarly; and he affirmed, that the Ass, as he knew by its signs, gesture and voice, did shew and intimate, that it took wonderfull well whatsoever he spoke to it. And if the Master had commanded the Ass to pick out the beautifullest woman in all the company, and would eye her narrowly in all her parts, and would draw near very boldly and confidently to him, it would make much of him. If the Master had given out, That there should be some barn or granary prepared for his Ass, then it would have shewed a great deal of exultation more then ordinary, and a great many such kind of tricks it played; and many such like things at large declared in Belonius. I would speak more of them, but I fear that there will be bounds put to them; and I could not have put them in my creed, had I not been an eye-witness of them amongst the Cayxian people.

404.

TO this is added one which Vincentius writes of, in Speculo, lib. 3. c. 109. that there were two guests which were Witches, which sometimes were wont to change men into beasts; and when they had turned a young man, a Player, into an Ass, who that he might be in his right wits, did shew great sport unto Travellers; he was bought by a Neighbour with a great price, who said, they would not hold their bargain, nor perform their Covenant, and if he should chance to go to a river, and so escape, therefore the Ass after a few dayes were spent, went unto the next Pool or Lake, and dipping twice or thrice in it, re-assumed its pristine shape. Peter Damianus, a man to be reckoned amongst the chief of his age, when he was diligently enquired of, of the Master and the AIs, and of the female Witches, he confessed it, and of those that saw the AIs turned into his humane shape, it was related before Pope Leo the 7th, and after it was a long while disputed on both sides pro and con, before that Pope; at last it was concluded on the affirmative part.

405.

man

406.

AND by this means may that also be confirmed which we read in Lucian and Apuleius Atheisticall men, to be turned into Assees, who said that this happened to the Witches by the Thessalonian women, who therefore were enemies to them that they might know for certain whether this was true or no, for both of them were atheisticall and accused of the Magicall Arts. Wherefore Apuleius turns every stone, and useth by all means and arguments in his Apology that he might wash off that accusation of Witchcraft and Sorcery, wherewith he was defamed, &c. Bodinus, lib. 2. cap. 6.

407.

OF all the deeds that Magitians challenge to themselves, you shall hardly find any more famous then that of causing Thunder, Lightning, Storms, and Tempests, as the Law had it ventilated, and has found it for certain, and therefore in lib. 5. Inquisitionum, it is recorded, that in the year 1488. in the Constantian Diocesse, there were Storms, Hail, Lightning, and Tempests, which hurt the corn for the space of four miles, the Countrey men inveighing against the Magitians. there were two of them apprehended, Anna de Mindelen and Agne, which were first attached, and when they were examined, they confessed a part, that one day they went into the field with a little water, and although one of them knew not the others mind or Counsell, yet they confessed they digged a little hole, or a little ditch, and that about noon-tide, throwing a little water into the hole or ditch, and stirring the water about, using some certain kind of unknown words, and calling upon the Devill; then this being done, they both went home, and so raised the Storm. Both of them were burned.

408.

THE same Author saith that there was Judgment given out by him against a Witch of the Constantian-field, which when she saw all the neighbours of her Village to be merry, and dancing at a marriage, and taking it grievously that she was not invited thereto; in the day time she was transported by the Devill to a hill near unto the Village, (the Shepherds seeing her) and because she had not water which she should throw into the ditch that she might stir up the tempest (for she confessed that she observed this ceremony) she made water, and stirring that about in the ditch, she spoke some certain words; by and by the Heavens which now were (as I may say) all CrySTALLINE clear, were muffled with Pirchy, Jet-like clowds, foul and black masks, and a great shoure of hail came quickly upon the dancers in the Village, and the VVitch returned turned into the Village again, they seeing her, did all verily believe that she had raised the tempest, and laid hold on her, and the shepherds did give in their testimony that they saw her carried through the Ayre: which she being accused of, and convicted, acknowledged it, and was burned.

WE read a memorable History in Pontanus 5. libro, The French of Suetia, besieged in the Neapolitan Kingdome by the Spaniards; when all things were parched with drought and heat, and the French in their battell having a great scarcity of fresh water; some Priests being Magicians, did draw about the Crucifix in the Streets in the night time, and with innumerable railings and blasphemies, they went their procession, and threw it into the Sea, afterwards they gave the consecrated host to an Ass, and brought him to the Church-porch, and there buried him alive; then after some Verses, and horrible blasphemies (which is not fit to be mentioned) there came great dashing showers, and made almost a deluge, and so by this means raised the siege, and were freed from the Spaniards, there was one in the year 1557. who threw all his Images and pictures into a Salt-peecker pit; and afterwards there was abundance of rain.

409.

ANd oftentimes Witches kill Cattle by sprinkling a certain kind of powder upon the thresholds they go over, nor that the powder can work such an effect, which might rather (as one would think) kill the Witches that carries it about them, then those creatures which go over it, especially when the Witches hide it one foot under the ground, but onely the Devill is the helper of it. I have heard of three hundred beasts by this means, which were destroyed in one instant in a Sheepfold of Bisurgia, Neither onely doth the Devill exercise his power, not onely in raising of Tempests, Hail, Lightning, and about Corn and beasts, but also upon Men, but chiefly upon wicked men, and those Witches (which were burnt at Paracutus in the year of our Lord, 1564. which we have mentioned) confessed that in those conventicles in which they were congregated together, they worshipped the Devill in the shape of a Kid, and when they were about to depart the place, they heard a great voice pronounced by the Kid, Either ye shall be revenged, or else ye shall dye: and so there were many men and beasts slain by him, leaving no other means of preserving life.

410.

Neverius writeth, that sentence was pronounced by him against one Stadlinus of the Lausansenian Diocesse, who confessed that eleven young Children were killed in the Vombs of the Mothers, and so also brought barrenness upon all the Cattle that belonged to his family, and being questioned about the matter, gave answer that there was a certain beast, whose name we keep secret, that was laid there by him at the threshold, which being taken away, Barrenness ceased in his house.

411.

412.

VV E read in the Monstrelian History of a short Witch that was taken by a Priest, who had two Toads that she had Baptized, which she used to Magicall uses, which I should esteem as ridiculous, were there not daily examples that confirmed it; VVhen Sir John Martin, put in stead of the Governour of Laodunensis, condemned a VVitch of S. Probat to be burned, who shook off two great Toads which they found in her Coffers. The Proisardian History witnesseth that there was one Curia with the Suesianians who asked Counsell of a VVitch that he might be revenged of an enemy who counsell'd him that he should Baptize a Toad, and give it some brave name, and give it the Sacrament; which he did, and many other things which is not to be expressed here, he confessed. Five Inquisitors after VVitches, declare these things amongst others, that examined a VVitch, which confessed that she put the consecrated bread in a Napkin which she ought to have swallowed down, and hid in the Cup where she nourished the Toad and put to it the powders which she had given her by the Devill, and so she muttered some few words (which is not fit to be mentioned here) and so sprinkled the Sheepfold thresholds over which the Cattle were to passe over the aforelaid powder, therefore she was apprehended, and burned.

413.

IN the examination of the Kalerian Witches in Subaudia which was Printed stood to be sould; we read that casting a certain kind of powder upon Plants, they will quickly wither and dye. I have (saith Bodin) in my power some Judgments that are sent unto me by that worshipfull Gentleman, the Lord of Pipemontens de barbu Dorca which by a Statute of Parliament 11. of January, 1577. one was sentenced to death by the Governour of S. Christopher, to Santisium which decree was confirmed and established, and condemned to be burned, and afterward the Witch confessed that she had killed three men by casting a little powder wrapped in a sheet of Paper, into that place by which they were to journey, and murmuring these words. In the name of God and all Devils, and other Conjuring diabolicall words. Which is not fit to be inserted in this place.

414.

Niderus writes, who examined abundance of Witches, that he saw one, who onely by his voice could kill men, and another that did turn up and down, her neighbours Ghost being a horrible spectacle. Anglus also writes (of whose History we have formerly spoken) being the Physician of the Palatinate Princes, that in the year 1539. there was an Husbandman of Ulrich that was afflicted with such kind of enchantments, Neufessurus by name, thorow whose skin there was an Iron nail stricken, and was so gnawed and tormented in his bowells; and despairing of remedy, strangled himself, and was anatomized, and cut up in the sight of all the Citizens, and there was found in his body a Staff, four Steel knives, knives, two plates of Iron, and a bottome of hait. And therefore no wonder is it, if the Thesalonian Witch at Pamphila caused a Woman's belly to swell and be tympanized, as if she had been about to bring forth three births, and for the space of eight Moneths she carried about her this burthen. In like sort did that Martinian Witch, which killed the German, not by poison, as Tacitus saith, or by a Cocks-Egg, but by the help of the Devill. And also that Witch in the Constantinian Diocesse, that did so puff up a mans body, as though he had the leprosy, and a little after troubled his mind. Sprangerus and other Inquisitors took care that she should be burned. The same Sprangerus relates, he being the cause of it that there was another burnt on the borders of Basil, and Alsacia, which confessed that she took grievously a contumely that was offered to her by a good honest man, a Husbandman, when she was asked what mischief she desired to be done unto that Husbandman that did so reproach her, to which question she gave answer, That she would have his face to swell. Not long after the Husbandman was infected with a Leprosy; these things she afterwards confessed to the Judge, that she was not able to do such a thing, but that it was done by the Devill; by which argument we prove that all these things are done by the Devill, who so insinuates and accommodates himself to the wills of men that use him, that whosoever should cure his enemy, should be killed by his sociate or companion.

WE also read in Sprangerus's Story, of one Plumberus, a certain Conjurer, who lived at Lendenburg in Germany, whom the Devill taught to shoot at, and pierce a Crucifix with Darts before Venus feasts, by which means using some kind of wicked words, and shooting and darting into the Ayre, he could daily kill and slay three men which he saw and knew, although they were encloyster-ed, and shut up in the narrow circumference of a little Tower, and sometimes did deliberate and consult whether he should destroy them or no. But at last the Countrey-men did rear him in pieces, without any Law-like Judgment after he had committed many bloody murders: These things were done in the year 1420. Bodinus Demonom. lib. 2. cap. 8.

415.

AT the Pedemontaniens, one Caralim by name, who seemed to be an Hermaphrodite, and when this Epicæne entered into other houses, and a while after they did kill men; therefore the Hermaphrodite was attached and apprehended, and did discover the conjurations and the conventicles of all the Witches, and many of their diabolical acts, (for there were almost 40 Witches) which did anoint the outward handle of the gates to kill men; this was done, and happened in the year 1536. And the same fell out afterwards at Geneva in the year 1568, where the Plague raged for the space of seven years, of which there dyed many. Cardan writes, That he saw a certain Witch at Patavia, which quickly kill'd a boy while she only gently touch'd his back with a rod. Glaucia being a zealous Witch of Medea, and the daughter of Creon, King, who married Jason, whom afterwards she slew, who sent her a golden Crown on the Marriage-day; and when Glaucia did set the Crown upon his head, there shined out a flame, by which he instantly was burned, as Euripedes writes in Medea, capud non vi sed medicis, he saith, Non venenis tuis sed pharmacis, not by thy poisons, but drugs and Medicines.

416.

417.

WE have before made mention of a Biebrane Witch, which was burnt at Laodunum, in the year 1556; This Witch did debilitate and weaken men, and strangely screwed them awry, and destroyed beasts and fruit; but at that very instant when she was burned, all these ceased, as we have had intelligence of the Judge who examined her; besides, the same Judge reported to me, That when the Witch threatened a certain woman, that she should never after give suck, it so happened, that her milk instantly dried up; and although she bore many children, yet her breasts were dried up: but the Witch being burned quickly, her breasts abounded with milk; I heard this of a certain Nobleman, that her Aunt did put an obstacle, or did cause her to be barren, and bring forth no children; but when she dyed, she confessed that she might get a place for her children: but after her Aunt dyed, and as soon as the clew of her life was unravell'd, or within a short while after, the Lady was with child, and bore 2. or 3. children after she had been married eleven years. Bodinus.

418.

Vierm tells a story of a certain Conjuror which he saw in Germany, who in the day-time, in the sight of the people, ascended, flew upwards towards Heaven; and when his Wife caught him by the feet as he was flying up, she was taken up together with him, and snatching hold on a Maid, snatcht her up too, and they hovered a good while in the Air, the multitude stood wondring at the miracle. A like Example we read in the History of Hugh Floriacensis, a Mantiscorense Earl, howling with a great voice, O friends, helpe me, was caught up into the Air and carried away, and was never seen after. The same Vierus relates, That he saw men snatcht into the Air by devils. And it was required of a certain Magitian in Germany, who promised, that he would bring out the Books of Franciscus the first King, out of the Madrid Tower; he was transported through the Ayre out of Spain into France; but for all this nothing was done, which was much feared, lest that they should rush upon the Captain, and break all the necks of the ruinators. So there was a Jewish Magitian, Sedechnus by name, who who (as John the Tritebian Abbot relates) did shoot a man thorough the Ayr, and tore his body, and gathering up his limbs, knit them together again, as did Simon Magus, Nero being present, who did gulph up a load of Hay, with Cart and Horses, and drivers, in the sight of all the people.

The End of the First Book.

THE

THE VVonderfull History
 OF
 S P E C T R A L S;
 AND

The several Devices and Delusions of Devils and Evil Spirits.

The Second Book.

Of Oracles, Prophecies, and Predictions of Devils.

- I. Telephus, the King of the Mysons, who did prohibit and interdict the Grecians from descending or going into the lower Countreys, when he obstinately pursued Ulysses amongst the Vines; but being hindred, he fell upon the trunk or stump of a Vine; Achilles was a great way off, who shor a Dart into the King's left thigh; but Peace being made, and the Greeks returning to their own Country, Telephus was a long time afflicted with the pain of the wound; and when he could not be cured by any means, when he was in great extremity, he was admonished by Apollo's Oracle, That he should make use of Achilles and Esculapius his sons; so he instantaneously sailed to Argos, lest he should be denyed of the remedy that was promised him by the Oracle;

Oracle; Achilles with Machan and Podalyrus took care of his wound, and in a short space, that which the Oracle did predict came to pass.

C Cræsus, the King of the Lydians, when he had parted with one son, as Atium, he had another son that was dumb, and for the cure of it, he left nothing undone, no stone was unturned; and then he sent to enquire of the Oracle at Delphos, to whom Pythia answered:

2.

Αὐτὸς γὰρ, ὡς δὲν βασιλεὺς, μέγα τίμην Κρίσῳ.

Μὲν βῆδ' ἀνέδωκεν ἴδω ἀνδ' ἀπαρ' αἰών.

Πᾶσις σφύσσῃσι. τίς δ' οὐ νόστος ἄλλος ἔσται.

Ἐμμεν δὲ δὲν γὰρ εἰς τὴν ἰσχυρὴν ἀνέστη.

Thy speechless son, great King, Cræsus high race,
Wish not his words to hear, thy long'd-for Grace;

One day thy boon shall thee distress, when thou Shalt have with force what thou requestest now.

The event did give credit to the Oracle; for the Gardi being taken by Cyrus, when a certain Souldier rushed upon the King, his dumb son cryed out with a loud voice, when before he never spoke word, Ἰσχυρὸς μὲν ἴδω Κρίσῳ O thou man, kill not Cræsus; so that Cræsus by his own fault lost his Kingdom, who by the words of his son, saved his life. Herodotus lib. 1.

3.

THe Minyæ relate or tell the story about Hesiod's bones, after this manner; The Plague raging upon Man and Beast, they sent some to consult with the Oracle, who received this answer, That to cease the Plague, there was onely this one remedy; for if they did but carry Hesiod's bones out of the Napaian field, into Orchomenium, otherwise their malady could not be cured; And again they asked of the Oracle, In what part of the Napaian field that should find them? Pythia gave answer, That a Crow would shew them the place. And when they returned back into their Country, and those that were sent enquiring for it not far from the way side, saw a Crow sitting on a stone, and there they digg'd, and found Hesiod's bones in the concave of the Monument, with this inscription, Pausanias in Boetia.

4.

A Themiensis, the son of Catatheus the Cretian's King, when he asked counsel of the Oracle, had this answer given, That the fates had decreed, that his Father should be slain by him; and desiring to shun that fate, of his own accord, together with many other Volunteers, went away into the mouth of Rhodes, which is called Camirus Catatheus, by the instigation of his onely son, took his journey into Rhodes, desirous of bringing his son into Cret; It was night time ere he came into the Island, and there was a fight and and a contention rise between his Companions and the Inhabitants of the Island, Althemenes coming with his help, unwittingly he slew his father with a Dart; for which cause Althemenes being struck with great sorrow, and not being able to bear the Atlantean burden of that grief, he did forsake the company of men, and wandered alone thorow desarts and uncouth paths, and he being spent with grief, dyed. Diodorus, lib. 3, cap. 13.

5. Amphiön's house being wholly consumed with the Plague, Laius succeeded in the Theban Kingdom; he taking to Wife Jocasta, Creon's daughter: and when he wanted children a long while, consulting the Oracle, Whether or no he were to have any children? received this answer, It was not good for him to have children, because if he had, there would proceed from him a son that should kill his father, and by such an unlucky fortune should contaminate his house; therefore Laius commanded the Infant that was born, that he should be thrown away, his feet being manacled in iron chains, from whence he was surnamed Oedipus, from the swelling of the wound. His household servants when they did not cast forth the Child which they had given to them, they did delivered it to a certain woman-servant, whose name was Polybia; and when he came to man's estate, Laius appointed and gave orders that they should consult the Oracle about the Infant that was exposed, and sent abroad. Also Oedipus being certified by whom he was so exposed, and going to Pythia, to get intelligence who were his Parents; so when he met with his Father at Phocidis, though they did not know one another, Laius did very imperiously command Oedipus to give him the way. Oedipus moved with anger, slew Laius, not knowing he was his Father. Diodorus, lib. 4, cap. 6.

6. Arifadus, the King of the Bosphorean Cymmerians, had three Sons, Eumelus, Satyrus, and Phrygamas; who when their father was deceased, strove and contended for the Kingdom; Eumelus by the help of Ariaphron, the King of the Thracians, slew Phrygamas; Satyrus oppugning the Palace, received a wound in one of the muscles of his arm, and so perished by it; therefore Eumelus being possessed of, and invested in the Kingdom for five years space, by a strange accident was slain; for when he returned home to his house out of Scythia, he hastened to a certain sacrifice, where there was a Chariot running to the Court, and it was carried upon four wheels, in which there was a Terror a Ravilion, the horses were affrighted, and so carried him away; When the Chariot-driver could not hold the reins, the King fearing lest he should be cast into ditches, endeavoured to leap out of the Chariot, and his sword being involved and sticking in one of the wheels; he was cut with it falling cross upon it, and so was slain instantly. It is also reported, that Satyrus was warned of the Oracle, that he should have a care of a Mouse, therefore he suffered none of his Subjects, to take that name, name, and was much in fear of household-mice, and field-mice, and gave warning that the boyes should kill the Mice, and stop the holes that they might not enter into the Rooms: At last he ended his life, being wounded in a muscle of his arm. Æmilius asking counsel of the Oracle; received answer, That he should have a care of those things that he had carried to his house; therefore he would not rashly enter into his house, unless first his young men had viewed the top and bottom of it; but when he was slain by reason of the Chariot wheel, because of the Tent that was carried in the Chariot, they all thought that the Oracle was fulfilled. Diodorus Siculus, lib. viges.

C Thus the King of the Persians marching to Istum against the Massagetes and Æsedonius, he consulted Orpheus's head in Lesbo; and asking the Oracle, of the event of the Wars; had this answer, οὐδὲν ἄνθρωπος, εἰ, Σίμωνα ἐξέται, ὡς ἐγὼ, habebis. Thou shalt dye the same death that I dyed of; the event gave credit to the Oracle: for Cyrus was slain by Tomyris the Queen, who cut off his head, as Orpheus's was by the Thracian Ædenians. Philostratus testis.

Polycrates the Samian Tyrant, after he had taken the Rhene Iland, and consecrated it to Apollo, there was set up gallant Playes at Delphos; and also sent to consult Apollo's Oracle, Whether he should call those Playes Delion, or Pythian? The Oracle answered, They shall be both Pythion and Delian Playes to thee; intimating, That he should soon dye, and therefore it was made a Proverb.

T Here was a great slaughter revealed unto Julius Cesar, by many evident and wonderful Prodigies; for a few moneths before that time, when the Husbandman by the Julian were brought into the Capuan Colony to cast down the old Monuments, to build new Villages, and they did it more accurately, in that some Antiquarians that searched, found some brazen Tables in a Monument, which did give notice to them, that Capys, the builder of Capua, was buried there; and there was found there that brazen plate, in which was written in Greek this sentence; when the bones of Capys shall be discovered, then shall it come to passe, that one of Julian should be slain by the hands of his Kinsmen. And presently after Italy was punished with great slaughter. And lest that any should think this thing fabulous and commentitious, the Author of it is Cornelius Balbus, one of Cesar's Favourites. Suetonius.

T Thus the Emperour had this of the Oracle, He should dye in the same manner that Ulysses perished and dyed, by the Sea; Ulysses was slain by his son Telamonius, by a Wray-spear, that is, by a weapon of that fish's bones, instead of an Arrow; And so Titus was kill'd by his brother Domitian with the poyson of a Sea-Hare. Cælius, lib. 26. cap. 30.

Y

Justinianus

7.

8.

9.

10.

11. Justinian, the Roman Emperour, about the year of our Lord, 533, sent one Mundus, a Captain, into Dalmatia, against the Ostrogoths, who inhabited Salona; And when he went out with his son Mauritius to behold the Camp, he was slain by the Goths; and so fulfilled the Oracle, and freed many from their fear. But there were some who said, That there were some Prophetical Verses pronounced by one of the Sybills, whose opinion was, that Mundus was to perish with his issue, where at length Africa was to be taken by the Romans; But then Justinian did restore Africa to the same Vandals: This Prophecie of Sybil did much perplex and affright many men, who did expect, that there would a suddain destruction come upon the whole World: But the event, death, and end of this Captain Mundus and his son, did shew, that such like Prophecies were obscure and ambiguous, and how fallacious the Artificers of Magick were. Aventinus, lib. 3. Annal. Romanorum: et Johan Magnus, lib. 10. cap. 14.

12. Manuel Comnenus hoping that the thred of his life should be extended, did put himself into a Monasticall habit, so that he ended both his life and his reign together; who had reigned eight and thirty years, excepting three months; to which continuance of the Empire, that old Oracle seemed to allude,

— Tu prehendet,

— et Postremo nomenis. viz.

The last part or syllable of thy name will put Finis to thy life.

For in the last syllable of the name of Manuel, with the Greeks, doth comprehend or compleat that number. Nicetas, lib. 7.

13. Xerxes beginning War with the Greeks, when he was vanquished and overcome at Salamina, he constituted Artabanus, that he should prosecute the War in his name; But when he little availed and prospered at the Platæa, when he fought and slew, his fame began to be mute; Artabanus left a great Treasure in the Tent which he had buried in the ground; Polycrates the Theban, enticed with hope of it, did buy the field; But when he had a long time made scrutiny and search for the Treasure, and yet did not find it, he consulted Apollo's Oracle at Delphos; by what means he might find the Treasure? Apollo answered him in these words, verba non sunt. Turn every stone; And when he did so, it is said, that he found great store of gold. Strabo in Clichidium.

T

After

14.

After that twelve Kings had created Setho to be King of Egypt, and making a strict covenant between themselves that they should not entrench one upon another, and so by a true conspiracy did rule Egypt: but in the mean while, it was known by the Oracle, that he that should sacrifice or offer in an Iron vessel should only obtain the Egyptian Empire. Not very long after, it came to passe that when by chance, when all the Kings stood in Vulcan's Temple in the manner of sacrificers, the chief Priest of the Temple, numbring each of them, except Psammetichus who stood in the last place, took off his Phial, and offered; and he being compelled by necessity, took off his Helmet, and sacrificed therewith, then he bore his Censer as the rest of the Kings did: the thing being minded, and observed, incontinently they that stood by, remembered the Oracle, and consulting together, they judged Psammetichus to be worthy of death. But by chance it happened to be known. The greatest part of the Kingdome being shaken off, the other Kings did relegate and disaunce by their Law, another part of them into the fenny part of Egypt, and that the rest should abstain from that: Psammetichus did take very ill that ignominy, and underhand took private counsell how he should revenge that contumely: therefore in the interim it was told by the Oracle out of Dalme, which was in the Buti City, accounted the trust of all those that the Egyptians had, that he should use the help and aid of the brazen men that should issue out of the Sea, and that they should vindicate Psammetichus, and inthron him in great dignity. Not much time was spent ere that the Jonians mixt with the Carian viewing all the Sea-coast thereabouts, that they might rob thereabouts, and being driven by Storms and Tempests, did voluntarily steer their course into Egypt: therefore one of the inhabitants seeing them land, and come on shore, affrighted at the uncomthnesse and strangenesse of the thing, being full of fear, related it to Psammetichus that the brazen men were come. For the Egyptians, untill that time, had never seen an harnesssed Souldier, then he perceived that the fatall time was come; and quickly he entered in league with the Jonians, and with their companions, and got them on his side, for the appointed war with many promises; and Psammetichus aided with these helps, quickly destroyed the Kings by whom he was relegated and dismissed, and all the Countrey was yielded to him. Sabellian lib. 4. Epinead. 2. et Herodot. lib. 2.

15.

Marcus Comnenus Emperour, having a Son born that he might make his birth-day more famous, did entertain his noblest Citizens (as the custome was) with a sumptuous feast, carrying boughs in their hands, and called his Son Alexis, not onely that he might honour him with his Grandfathers name, but for the Oracles sake, who by ambages and doubfull speeches gave answer that so long the stock of the Comnenian family should endure as the name did comprehend the letters αλφα, per A. Alexis; per J. Johanes.

nes; per M. and A. Manuel, and his son Alexius, not obscurely did signify. Nicetas lib. 3.

16.

THe Countrey of Beotia being spoiled and devastated by the fury, violence, and war of the Thracians, they who over-lived the slaughter, went into the innermost conceast den where the Oracle was, That there they should take up their seats, where they should see the white Crows. By and by in Thebaly near the Pogastian promontory, when they were objected there to their sights, there were discovered to be white Crows, which being wet in Wine, the boys sent out de-albified and anointed with brine or plaister. Calim, lib. 57. cap. 11.

17.

WHen the Tenari-Cretansians sought themselves out new habitations, and taking advice of the Oracle, received this answer, That they should there fix their station, and inhabit where γῶνός, ἡοῦ ὄψι, ἡρρα ἑλλίος ἀδωρενται, where the sons of the Earth should set upon them. They wandring about Alysa and Cilitia, at last came into Troy, where they fell asleep; then a great company of domesticall mice did eat and gnaw the strings of their Bowes and Shields, so that when they awaked and rose up, they could make no more use of their Bowes, therefore they thought that the Mice were the Enemies that were foretold to them by the Oracle; and late down and lived in that place, and builded the Town Sminthe, because the Cretans call mice σμήτις. Enfucking, lib. 1.

18.

THe Phrygians being carried by Aeneas their Captain into the Laurell field, were not willing to go any farther, but listened to the Oracle, that it might shew them some future events, and contingencies, the Oracle told them, That there they were to have their permanent dwellings, where for hunger they should be driven to eat their Tables: Which not very long after their repulse happened, and then they remembered, and made themselves bread-trenchers, which was for their meat, that for want of it they eat, and then there was a cry from one to another, that now they were destroyed, and dead men because of their error, for there should they have their Mansions and dwellings, where they should eat such kind of Tables for want of meat, which words were received with favour and consent by all them that stood about. It is not very evident where they rejected that answer of the Trojan: some think at Dodoneum, others in the Tent Cottage of Ida in Erythris, which Sybill did inhabit, a Maid propheticke and dwelled there. It is also said that the Trojans were commanded to sail to the Western Countries untill they were driven into that place where they should be forced to eat their Tables for want of bread. And when that happened they knew that time was come that they should end their wandering, and that they were arrived at this fabled land. Satellion, lib. 7. Enclid. 1.

19.

THe Lacedemonians were led into the Tarentine Colony by their Captain Phalanx, a Spartane; the Oracle at Delphos predicted, that when he did observe rain under Ethra, then he should be Master or overcomer of the field and City. But when he himself by the clew of his own reason, could not trace out the meaning of the Oracle, neither knew what it meant; nor consulted any interpreter, he made ready his Navy to go into Italy; and there when he had overcome the barbarous Nations, and neither could compass the field nor City when it came into his mind, that it was utterly impossible that that which the Oracle said should be, and began to suspect it, whether it was the voice of God or no, because it could never come to passe that it should rain, when it is a pure Crystalline serene Heaven, which the Greeks call Ethra; His Wife very lovingly did comfort him by all means, who did so despond and despair, and sometimes leaning his head upon her knees, and killing flies, her tears for sorrow of heart, and the hard fortune of her husband, trickled down, that her hope was so frustrated. Wherefore opening the sluces and flood-gates of her eyes, she did bedew, and wet her Husbands head; then were the knors of the Oracle unloosed, for the name of his Wife was Ethra. Therefore in that very night which followed that day, he took the City, and a rich Seat Town of the Tarentines. Pausanias in Phocis.

20.

Codrus, an Athenian King, sprung out of Thrace, when the whole Attick Region was destroyed with the Peloponnesian War; he advising with the Oracle, had this answer, That they should be Victors, whose Captain perished by a warlike hand; therefore putting off his Kingly regal habit, he was like to a common Souldier, and offered himself to the force of his enemy; and one of the adverse Souldiers struck him with his weapon, and so he voluntarily run upon his own death; and was willing rather to perish himself, then that the Athenians should perish. Cicero in fine lib. 1. Tuscul. quest. et lib. 5. de finibus.

21.

When Xerxes made War with the Grecians, the Lacedemonians enquiring of the Oracle about the event of the War, they received this answer from Pythia, That the Athenians were to be overcome by the Persians, but that the Spartan King was to be kill'd in the field. Herodotus saith, the Athenians being relinquished and lost, three hundred of the Lacedemonians were slain with their King Leotidas. Herodotus lib. 8.

22.

THe Romans making War against Pyrrhus the Epirote King, Paulus and Emilius received this answer from the Oracle, That he should be the Victor, if he should build an Altar in that place where he saw a man swallowed up in his running. A few dayes after he saw Valerius Terquatus swallowed up in the ground; and therefore he built an Altar there; and got the Victory, and sent an

an hundred and sixty Elephants to Rome, carrying Towers on their backs. Plutarchus in Parallelis.

23.

IN the Cimbrick Warr Batabaces came to Pessizunte, being Priest to the Mother of great Idea, he brought the Goddess out of the Temple, to declare Victory to the Romans, and of the great glory and credit of the Warr which was to come: And when the Senate was agreed on it, and for Victory sake had determined to go to the Temple of the Goddess of Victory; and when he was coming forth to make his Oration to the People, that he might declare these things to them, A. Pompeius, the Tribune of the people, did hinder Batabaces, calling him a deluder, a deceiver, and pluckt him out of his Pulpit with great indignity, when the thing it self spoke for it, and commended his words; and when Pompeius returned home with whispering and muttering speeches, such a Fever bore him company, (as every one knew) that he dyed within seven dayes after. Plutarchus in Marii vita.

24.

WHen the Vejentes in a sharp and long Warr were driven within the City Walls by the Romans, and yet the City could not be taken; and the delay did seem no lesse burdensome and intolerable to the besiegers, then to the besieged, the immortal gods by a wonderful miracle did make way for them; that they might accomplish their desired Victory; on a suddain the Albane Lake or Gulph not being at all encreased by any showers from Heaven, neither had it any addition from any inundation from earth, did overflow its banks; and for inquisition sake to know the reason of it, Ambassadors were sent to Apollo's Oracle at Delphos, to know the reason of it; They received this answer, That the water of that Lake should be diffused thorough the fields; for so even should the Vejes be over-run, and brought into subjection by the Romans: And before the Legates might proclaim or declare, a Southsayer of the Vejentians was taken by a Roman Souldier, (for they wanted Interpreters of their own) and he was brought into the Tents, and did prophesie and predict: Therefore the Senate being warned by a double admonition and prediction, almost at the same time did obey the Oracle, and was possessed of the City. Valerius Maximus, lib. 1. cap. 6.

25.

WHen the Dorientes did often attempt to take Elee against Augea's posterity, whose King was then Eleeus, they were commanded by the Oracle, that when they sailed back again, they should make Trioculus Captain; And by chance Oxylus met him sprung out of, and begotten of Emon of Thous his son, being a banished man in Scholia, playing in the Sun, unwittingly he kill'd a man; And when he had blinded a Mule of one of his eyes, Orrispones ingeniously conjectured, that the Oracle belonged to Oxylus, therefore the Captain being elected, they passed to Delapinnesus in a ship; for he conceived, that by a Foot-Army they could not attempt tempt to break thorough the straits; so the Dorians obeyed, and they presently got Elea. Pausanias, lib. 3.

THe Lacedemonians were alwayes overcome in Warr by the Tegeans: they asked advice of the Oracles, How, and by what means they might so please their gods, that they might overcome the Tegeans? Pythia answered, That Oristes the son of Agamemnon, his bones were to be brought to Lacedemon; and they doubting and being uncertain of the place in which they were hid; The Oracle answered, 26.

Εστ' τις ἀρκάδιος τοῦτο ἀδὸν εἰς χυμῶν.

Εἰ δ' ἀρκάδιος ἦν, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἀνδράσι.

Καὶ τὸν δ' ἐστὶν ὁ γ' αὖτ' ἐν ὧν ἀνδράσι.

Εἰ δ' ἀρκάδιος ἦν, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἀνδράσι.

Τὸν δ' ἀρκάδιος ἦν, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἀνδράσι.

To this purpose:

There's an Arcadian liveth in a Cot, where wind is by two bulls together got,

where type on th' antitype, one diene is set

Upon another, where he bury'd yet

The spoyle of Agamemnon: if that ground

And Cot thou purchasest, there they may be found.

When no man could understand the Oracle, Liches, one of the benefactors of the Spartans, came to Tegea, and sitting down in a Brazier's Shop, wondered at his works. To whom the Smith said, Why dost thou wonder, O thou stranger, (saith he) at these? thou wouldest much more wonder, if thou shouldst see a Sepulchre which I have found, by digging a Well under ground, in which I saw bones seven cubits long, which I again buried in the earth. Then Liches instantly call'd to mind the Oracle within himself, and conceived, that those two winds which the Oracle had spoken of, were the bellows of the Smith; and that the anvil was an antitype: for he was so suffer in rowing back; and that the hammer was a sign or emblem, which struck the Anvil, of evil, first passive, because it suffers from the hammer; afterwards also active, because it was invented for mens destruction. And Liches ruminating with himself, did communicate this thing to the Lacedemonians, and feigning an escape, returned to the Tegeans; and he brought the skeleton of the Smith, and privily carried the bones to Lacedemon. And then it came to passe, that the Lacedemonians overcome the Spartans in Warr, almost at that very same time in which Cyrus took the Kingdom from Croesus. Herodotus, lib. 1.

27.

IN the reign of Tiberius the Emperour, there was an Oracle given out at Rome, in these words;

His ter trecentis circumvolventibus annis, Seditio perdet Romanis.

Ere three three hundred Snakes incircled bee,
Rome by Sedition ruin'd you shall see.

Which they did think came to passe in Nero's time, which fell out near that time; the people repeated these words, when part of the City was wickedly burnt by Nero; Nero to pacifie the people, said, That there was never such words spoken: Which done, the people sung this Sybills verse, Ultimus Aeneadem matrem necat Induperator.

The last of the Aeneas's Family (shall kill his Mother, he being Emperour. Which happened; and whether it was an Oracle from God, or from a prophetick spirit that was amongst the people, or by a guesse that they had from the state that things was then in, I know not; for Nero was the last of the Julian-Family, which sprung from Aeneas which ruled. Xiphilinus, in Nerone.

28.

A Little before the coming of the Spaniards into America; the King of the Island which, after the name of the Finders, they called Hispaniolam; he consulted the Idol of Zemus, and religiously under went a Fast for five dayes together, also much whipping, that he might know what would become of his Kingdom. The Devill answered, That there were bearded, which should be armed men, that should take away the Kingdom by force, and that by one fatal blow, they by their swords should anatomize many bodies, and that they should oppress the Inhabitants by cruel servitude. The King hearing the words of the Oracle, and that he might appease the wrath of the gods, he epitomized and comprehended in a verse which they call Armentum, which he would have to be sung at their Festivals, with solemn ceremonies; therefore many of the Inhabitants when they saw the Spaniards first come into the Island, they consulted how they might escape, remembering the Oracle. Petrus Cieka, tom. 2. rerum Indicarum, cap. 33.

29.

S*ardanapalus*, an Assyrian King, was besieged by Arbaces & Medes: On the City of Ninus, there was an Oracle given to his Ancestors, That Ninus could never be taken, unless the Enemy should make a River to the City, which he verily believed could never be taken; and therefore he thought he could beat out the siege; and also expected aid to come to him. When he had held out the siege for the space of two years, by lethargiz'd and idle besieged persons the River by continual showers did flow to a very great height; and when it had deluged a good part of the City, and had cast and thrown thrown down the Walls for the length of twenty furlongs; The King thinking the time of the Oracle was come to passe, despaired of remedy; and lest that he should be taken of the enemies, he burnt the Palace. Arbaces creeping thorough the ruines of the walls, was made King. Diodorus, lib. 2. cap. 7.

THere was an Oracle given to the Poet Hesiod, that he should have a care of the Temple of Nemean Jupiter; when therefore he took his flight from Nemean at Peloponnesus, by chance he came into Oeneon of Locris, where there was a Temple of Jupiter Nemean; and being in that place, unawares he was slain by Amphiphane and Garetor, the sons of Phygieus, because they believed their Sister was deflowred by him, and that Stesichorus was sprung from him by that illegitimate means. Thucyd. apud Oyrald. Dial. 2. hist. P. 61.

E*raminondas* the Thebane received this from Apollo's Oracle at Delfos, That he was to have a care of Pelagus, which he thought was to be understood of the Sea; wherefore it was his greatest care, lest he should be carried or transported any where by Galleys; or by any other vessel: But the Devil had forewarned him, not that he should avoid the Sea, but a Grove that he was to eschew at Mantineia, whose name was Pelagus, where he dyed. Panfanus in Arcadiae & Suidas.

THere was an Oracle also given to Cambyses, a Persian King, of the City of Latona of Butus, that he was to yield himself to the fates in the way to Ecbatana; he understood it of Ecbatana of Media; but when he was in Syria, after the death of Apis the Egyptian god, he got upon his horse, his sword was naked, wounded the King in the thigh, tormented with fear and grief; and he asked What was the name of the next Town; and when he knew that it was Ecbatana, he did acknowledge his error, and dyed despairing. Herodotus lib. 3.

P*ythia* did prophesie and predict the death of Philip King of Macedonia, in this manner:

--- Taurus adest, & finis adest, serietq; ministet;
Et Gracis pariter,
O utinam fierem Jovis ales in aethere juxta
Thermadoontis aquas, procul ut bella horrida ab ulso;
Despicerem, visus flet at hic qui vixit obvult.

A Bull being present, thy end's not absent far;
The servant o're the Greeks shall domineer;
O that I were Jove's Bird eagling on high,
Towering alwayes near to the azure sky;

O're Thermolonian waters for to see
 Such crimson and such scarlet Tragodie,
 Where conquer'd shall bewail with weeping eyes,
 The Conquerour conquer'd, by the fates shall dye.

This doubtfull speech King Phillip interpreted on his side, and thought that it was predicted by the Oracle as though Aenes were to be sacrificed in the manner of a sacrifice. But the meaning was far otherwise which signified quite contrary, to wit Phillip being amongst a great company of men amongst the sacrifices where there ought to be a crowned Bull sacrificed, and therefore he was very glad, and sacrificed joyfully, supposing afterwards to have his tutelary Gods to help him to bring Asia under the dominion of Macedonia, and when he offered great oblations in honour of the Gods, and his daughter Cleopatra, which came of his Wife Olympias, was espoused to Alexander the King of the Epirots his Brother, he commanded that the Marriage should be celebrated in the City of Macedonia, and many out of all the parts of Greece flock'd to that jolly wedding, and magnificent concerts of Musick, and contention in it, and allow a great feast made to receive the friends and guests, he in the midst of the ceremonies invested in a white garment, was slain by Pausanias one of the guard, at the Thermolonian River near Cheronea, where a little while before he had got a famous victory of the Grecians: for Pausanias took vainly that he was complain'd of for ravishing of Attalus the Niece of Olympias and was often derided of the King for it. Diodorus lib. 16. & Pausanias in his description of Greece.

34.

THe same King when he had consulted the Dolphick Oracle what he might do that he might come and attain to a full and perfect age; Pylia commanded him that he should avoid Quadrigas, which he understood, was meant a Cart drawn with four horses; which hearing, he gave order that all Carts throughout his whole Kingdome should be removed, and would not go in to Bortia, which was called Quadrigas. At the last he was slain by Pausanias, who carried a Cart and four Horses engraven in the hilt of his Sword. Valerius Maximus, libro primo. Cicero de fato. Plutarch, in Alexandro. Others say, that when he encircled and rid about the Theban Marsh, which was called Curra, he was slain.

35.

A*Schylus* the tragick Athenian Poet, was told by the Oracle that he should dye by a blow; therefore being a banished man in Sicilia, he did eschew roots lest he should be oppress'd by their ruine, or knock'd on the head by their fall; but it happen'd that sitting on a stone in the Country, with his head uncovered, and an Eagle flying on high called Adorphus, (whose sole property it is to break the Sea shell-fish) and being hallucinated and deceived by the whitenesse of his bald pate, thinking it to be a chalky stone, let the shell-shell-fish fall upon it, to have the shell-fish broken, and so Æschylus perished by that fall and stroke. Idem, lib. 9: cap. 12.

D Aphidas the Sophister, when he Ironically had consulted the Delphick Oracle; whether he might have an Horse upon which he might be carried; The Oracle answered that there might be found one, but that he should be so troubled and vexed by it, that he should dye. A while after he went to Attalus the King, whom he had formerly offended, and was apprehended, and so precipitated, and cast down from a stone, was called Equus. Cicero de fato, Et Valer. Max. lib. 1. de Miraculis.

36.

V *V*hen Dionysius the Seniour, Tyrant of Syracusa, acted a Tragedy to the Athenians in their Bacchanalian feasts, and when he by all their suffrages and voices was declared Victor, one of the Quaristers or chanters, of the Muscally company, thinking that he should have some great reward if he were the first Messenger that should relate the Victory, sailed in all haste to Corinth. And there found a Ship that was to go to Sicily, and boarding on it with prosperous winds and gales sailing to his desired Haven, and arriving at Syracuse, and then incontinently related the Victory to the Tyrant, and was gratified with great rewards. Dionysius was exceeding glad of the news, and offered gratulatory sacrifices to his Gods, and celebrated great feasts, banquettings, and Bacchanalian, and when he had invited his friends and familiars indulging and overcharging himself with too much wine, fell into a grievous sickness by reason of his too much gulping of Wine. But when he was told by his Gods that he was to dye, when he had overcome his betters. He taking the Oracle in this sense, to wit, as having reference to the Carthaginians, that they were better, stronger, and more warlike men than he. Wherefore having many conflicts, bickerings, skirmishes with them, if the victory seemed to hang in equilibrium, i. e. even ballance, or rather his side was likely to have the Prevalent, he was wont to make the two Wings of his army to fly away and to be overcome of their own accord, least he should seem to overcome his betters, but yet for all this Maachevilian Policy, he could not escape the sentence which the fates had determined against him. But being an indifferent good Poet, was adjudged by the Athenian suffrages to overcome better Poets; therefore the truth of the Oracle being in some measure accomplished, and fulfilled, the term and date of his life ended. Diodorus, lib. 15, 37.

A Alexander the Epirot's King, being called into Italy by the Tarentines, and by the lots of the Dodonean Oracle, he was warned to have a care of Athenusia, and the City of Pandosia; for there he was to yield himself to the fates, for this cause he sent before him into Italy, that he might keep a distance from Pandosia a City of Epirus, and Acheron its River, which the Thesprotian bosome received, it flowing out of Adoloffis, standing hellish black jet-like pools and bayses. But no humane providence or foresight could eschew fatal necessity, which for the most part rushes soonest into that which is aimed most to avoid. Oftentimes Alexander had overcome the Brutians and Lucans in battell, and had taken many of their Cities. In the mean time, he had fortified and strengthened three Monuments not far from the Pandosian City, which did grieve and molest the borders of the Lucans and Brutians, and did grievously oppress the Countrey thereabouts. But continually showers did so deluge and overflow the fields that lay between, and so the army being parted into three, could not get help from any other. Alexander, not being able to get supplies, made two Bulworks or Castles of defence, therefore they environed with their siege, the Captain parting with, and losing a great part of his riches and provision: There were of the Lucans exuls and banished men about Alexander 200; by this means, they with their party promised that they would bring the King into their power, either alive or dead. Therefore the King daring to adventure, broke through the midst of his enemies with his out-spread waving hands and arms, and killed the Captain of the Lucans, fighting with him hand to hand, and gathering together his army into one, he with a full body came to the River, the strength of whose Tide a little before had broke down the bridge, and when he consulted of an escape over it, being not fathomed by him, and his Army being tyred out, and by chance one blab'd forth the name of the River, which was much hated by the King, and so exclaimed and cryed out, Art thou called Acheron, which being known, he made a great hesitation whether or no he should passe over the River: and when he so delayed, one Sotinus a servant, gave warning that the Lucans did seek places to lye in wait for them, and when the King thought that they were ready to rush upon him, with his naked Sword, he leapt into the River. A Horse on the overthwart bank stood to receive him; which when one of the Lucans had wounded him with casting a Dart, and the streaming Tides carryed him down (his Spear sticking fast) towards the enemies Camp dead, and they tearing it to pieces, and cutting it in the midst, one part they sent away, the other was kept for to be mocked, which they a long while battered with stones and darts, and at the last they delivered it to a Woman, that she might keep it to be a rancome to redeem her Husband and children: which were captives on the adverse party, and they sent away the bones of the burned body to their enemies at Metapontum, from whence they were further sent to Cleopatra, and to her sister Olympias, the Mother of Great Alexander. Strabo; lib. 6. Valerius Maximus; lib. 7.

38.

39.

There was an old Oracle came from the Altar of Jupiter Ammon, concerning the death of Annibal the famous Carthaginian Captain. Lybysa corpus teget tuum. Lybysa shall be thy grave. Annibal did suspect Africa, and that his buriall should be in Carthage, and thought he should end his life there, for there is a fabulous place of Bythinia: beside the Sea not far off, there is a little Village called Lybysa, and by chance Annibal was banished there; and because he alwayes suspected the mollities, and tendernesse of the King of Prussia, and abhorred the Romans, therefore he opened seaven subterraneal holes or passages before his house, or out of his Tent, and divers foramina or oiler holes made, in which there was many secret conspirators, privately combining together. And when he received that commandement of T. Quintus Flaminius the Roman Ambassadour which he had desired and obtained of the King, he attempted a flight through the private holes; but when he fell into the Kingdomes snares, he determined to kill himself. Some report him to wrap his neck in his Cloak, and commanded his servant that he should infix his knee in his posteriors, and twine and twist him hard; untill he should dye. Livius lib. 8. Decad. 4. and had poison given him, which he had power to mix and mingle himself, and taking the cup himself, said, We free at last the Roman people by this dayes work, when he believed that it was expected there should be a long and a tedious death of that hated old man, and by this means they say Annibal perished. Plutarchus in Flaminio. Pausanias vero in Arcadicis; that when he got upon a horse, he of his own accord, wounded his hand, and had not rid far when a Feaver got hold of him by reason of the inflammation of his wound, and that he dyed within three dayes. And so the fatall name of the man whom the Nicomedienses called Lybysam, fulfilled the Oracle.

40.

Appian Claudius in a Civil war, in which Cn. Pompeius falling out with Cesar, breaking the league, bringing both detriment to himself and to the Common-wealth, desirous to find out the spring and root of that great sedition (for he excelled in strength the Achasan Empire) he compelled the chief Governour of the Delphick Tripolis, to descend into the inmost concave that they might know certain things; consulting with the Oracles, they were almost choaked such a damp and stinking vapour of that divine, or rather diabolical spirit was drawn in by them. Therefore an inspired Virgin by the instinct of the Deity, and with a horrid voice, sung with such quavering sounds of words, uttered the destiny, or Oracle. For it is nothing (saith she) to thee; in this Romane war, thou shalt get the Valley of Euboea: but he thinking to be admonished by Apollo's Oracles, lest there should arise any contention or difference about it, departed into that Region and Countrey which is between Rhamminta, that noble and renowned part of Micka and Caristum, bordering upon the Chalcidick Sea, lying between, got the name of Eubœa, where he was spent and consumed of a disease, before the Pharsalian combat and fight, and he possessed that burying place, which was foretold him by the Devill. Valerius Max. lib. 1. cap. 8.

41.

THe Antianean Oracles gave an Item wth to C. Caligula that he should have a care of Cassius, therefore he gave order that Cassius Longinus the Pro-consull of Asia being a Lawyer, to be put to death; but before he had satisfied his tyrannicall desires, he was slain by Cassius Chæren, not being able to eschew his fate. Rutilius, in vita Cassii.

42.

Michael Comnenus Palæologus Emperour, grieved with a pain at his heart, and being much troubled and perplexed with the fear of death, he asked those that stood about him, what was the name of that place. When he had heard the name of Pachonius and Allages, with a great sigh, he said, that there was he to finish his life, and that his death was decreed by the fates, and therefore bitterly accused himself, that before that time he had not blinded and pluck't out the eyes of that honest man Pachonius, for that an Oracle was publicly reported to be given out concerning the Emperour, that being deceased Pachonius should succeed him in the Kingdome, and being deceived and blinded with the love of ruling he had not hastened to make Pachonius unserviceable for the Empire. Gregoras lib. 5.

43.

THere was a famous City in Olympus, whose name was Libetbra, which Mountain stretched it self forth into Macedonia, not far from which City there is Orpheus's Tomb and Monument, and there was formerly an Oracle had from liberi patres, to the Libetbrians out of Thrace, that their City should be rased out, and destroyed by a swine, when the Sun first should see Orpheus's bones. And therefore they being so well versed and accustomed to the Oracle, that they never mistrusted any thing, neither did they believe that there was any wild beast endued with such strength that could deface such a City, which relied no lesse upon their own confidence then it's great strength. But when it pleased the Gods that these things should come to passe, a certain shepheard at noon-tide being weary, laid down beside Orpheus's Tomb. And by chance falling asleep, in his dream began to chant and to sing Orpheus's Verses in a sweet and delectable tone, and by that sweet chanting, those shepheards that were hard by, and those Plowmen that were plowing not far off being much taken with it, left their work, and ran to hear the sweet song of the sleeping shepheard, and there when they joggled and jubbled one another rearer and nearer to the shepheard, they threw down the Pillar, and that being cast down the Urne was broken up, which done the Sun saw Orpheus's bones: Therefore in the following night, a great deal of rain came, and the River sides (being one of Olympus's streams) cast down the walls of

of the Libethnians, and returned the holy Temples and buildings, and destroyed all the men and beasts which were within the walls. Pausanias in Boeotia.

THe Siphnian Islanders, by reason of their silver and gold Mines, are very rich, heaping up great Treasures, and yearly did send their rents to Apollo at Delphos; they inquired of the Oracle, Whether they were to possess their present enjoyments long, or no? Pythia answered;

44.

Ἄλλ' ὅταν ἐν πόλει σφισίηναι πόλιν ἴδωμεν Ἀδικοῦντες τ' ἔσσης, τότε ἂν ἡ πόλις ἴδωμεν ἐφ' ἧς ἔσσης, ἔσσης τ' ἔσσης, ἔσσης τ' ἔσσης.

When you a Market-House, and Council Hall
 Erect all white, beware, a cunning Bludge
 With wooden Troops, and with red Ensigns shall Thy Coasts and Thce with cruelty invade.

The Event confirmed the Oracle, for the Siphnians at that time had a Market-place and a Council-houle built of white Parian Marble; when the Samiens instantly came themselves to Siphnum, and sending a Ship with their Ambassadors to the City, which was (as all ancient ships used to be) painted red; the Messengers did require ten talents; the Siphnians refused. The Samiens possessed themselves of their fields, and slew many of their City, and took many prisoners, which the Siphnians redeemed for a hundred Talents; Then at last (although it was very late) they understood the Oracle, of a wooden Army, and a red Ship of Legates and Ambassadors; Herodotus, lib. 3.

THere was an ancient Oracle given to the Messanians in Sicily, Carthagenenses urbem suam lictas futuras; Which they understood in this sense, that the Carthaginians were to be slaves of the City Messana, and to be servicable to them; and by this hope were puffed up with pride; therefore they attempted to oppose themselves against Hannibal the Carthaginian Captain; but their City being taken, at the last they understood the equivocal sense of the Oracle; for Hannibal did command the Carthaginian Soldiers, like servants, that they should demolish and pull down all their houses, and that they should leave nothing unruinated and not pull'd down, and to burn all; and to spatter the ruines all about; neither was there any delay for his commands, they did ruinate the walls, and o'return the buildings with such violence, that the multitude hasting, and being urgent, in a short time they had finished the work, all the Monuments were presently abolished; and the manner of the place was utterly blasted out; and the ground, where the City formerly stood, did appear so overthrow, and trampled, that scarce any tokens of habitation could be any where discerned, &c. Diodorus, lib. 14.

45.

and

46.

THe Phocenses being miserably vexed with War by the Theſſalians, sent to consult the Oracle at Delpbos, concerning their affairs: and their Ambassadors, received this answer;

*Mortalem atq; Deum jubeo decernere ferro:
Victor uterq; aliud sed enim mortalis habeto.*

The god and man I do command to try
It out by sword, who shall have victory:
They both are conquerors, I do confesse,
But yet the mortal shall the god possesse.

The Phocenses being puzzled with this dubious Oracle, and not at all understanding the meaning of it, sent out three hundred Scouts, who were all slain even to the last man, with their Captain Gelo. This slaughter struck the Camp with a very great terrour. And at last they were come to that height of desperation, that they brought together their Wives, Children, all their goods, and whatsoever they could wrap or wring, as gold, silver, and rich clothes, and amongst the rest, the Ensigns of their gods, and building about them a very great Pile, they left onely thirty men to look to them, with strict charge, that when they were in fight with their enemies, if they saw any thing go cross or against them, they should first slay their wives and children, and then cast all the goods upon the Pile, and then put fire to it; and lastly, that they should either kill one another, or run desperately upon their enemies weapons; from which amongst the Greeks all cruel and immane Counsels and Designs were called Phocica, or Phocensian. Things being thus ordered by the advice and counsel of Tellias, an Elian Prophet, they draw out against the enemy, and being resolute, rush most desperately in amongst them, and being acted with utter desperation, plyed their hands so furiously, that they obtained the most absolute and signal victory that ever any Age could boast of. Then was the Oracle plain and obvious to every ordinary understanding. For according to their custome in War, the Generals on both sides gave to their Souldiers tesera, or marks to be known by from the enemy, as we do our Watch-word. And these happened then to fall pat with the answer of Apollo: The Theſſalians giving Etanis Minerva, and the Phocenses the Founder of their Country, Phocus.

47.

THe Lacedaemonians having received the most healthfull and good Laws of Lycurgus, after his death being (as we say) prick'd with provender, and not content longer to enjoy their ease and quiet, pult with the conceit of being more noble then the

Arcadians,

Arcadians, they consult Pythia, when as they might have had the possession of that whole Kingdom to themselves entirely: To whom she returned this answer:

*Ἀρκάδ' ἴσθ' ὅτις ἔστιν ἡμεῖς, ὅτι τοῖς Ἀρκά
Πόλλ' ἐκ Ἀρκάδ' ἐλθόντες ἀδελφεὶ λαοῖς.
Οἱ δ' Ἀρκάδων, οὐδ' ἴσθ' ὅτις ἡμεῖς.
Δόξω τοι, Πύθ'ια, σπουδάζοντι ἰσχυρῶς,
Καὶ κατὰ πύσσας γόλῳ διακρυφάμεν.*

Wouldst thou Arcadia have? a pious boon;
Yet I will grant many more: enter soon;
Arcadia enter shall, their Illyrians;
And this I grant thee, Thou shalt there a fair
And plenteous harvest reap their Land about:
All rich, with fetters thou shalt see set out.

When the Lacedaemonians had received this answer, they declined their assault of the rest of Arcadia, and only set upon the Tegates, taking fetters along with them, to wit, that having an Oracle to that purpose, they might bring the Tegates into captivity, and so make use of their fetters. But having fought them, they themselves were vanquished, and those that came alive into the enemies hand, were fettered with those very ropes they had brought, and put to mow and till the Tegate Land, being restrained within the length of their fetters. Those very fetters remained in the Temple of Minerva Calia at Teges, within the memory of man, being hung up as a Prophecy for that victory. Herodotus, lib. 1.

C Leomenes, King of the Spartans, consulting the Oracle at Delphos, had this answer, Eum Argos esse capturum; which runs either thus, That he should take Argos; or That Argos should take him; or be the Argians: Which Oracle understanding in the more favourable sense, he was very confident of taking the City Argos: but when he had surrounded some Troops of the Argi in a Grove, and there burnt them, asking who was the Deity of that place; and being told it was Argos, he complained the Oracle had deluded him; and thus quitted all hopes of conquering Argos. Herodotus, lib. 2.

48.

P Philonectus the Phocessian, having taken the Delphick Oracle, began to compell Pythia to tell him something of the future event of the affairs of his Country: At whose importunate carriage the woman being much moved, said unto him, Σὺ γὰρ οὐκ ἔσθ' ἐν τῷ κράτει. At which words Philonectus being much rejoiced, taking them as a small part of his destiny, and the prediction of his future success; and presently hereupon gave out in writing, That the Gods had licensed him to do what he pleased; and after the custom calling together the people, in a speech he made to them, expounded the Oracle, exhorting them to be of good courage for the future; and after this wholly bent his resolution and endeavours for military designs. There happened also a Prodigy in the Temple of Apollo, in this manner; An Eagle hovering over the roof, cast her self down to the very ground, and followed some Doves that were carried into the Temple, preying upon them at the very Altar; which those that pretended skill in matters of that nature, expounded, an undoubted token of the good success of Philo-melus and the Phocians in the Delphic War; which lasted nine years dubious, but at last terminated with the destruction of the Phocians; Diodor. lib. 16.

49.

50. C Crasus demanding of the Oracle at Delphos, Whether he should reign long, or no? received this answer from Pythia;

Ἄν' ἔσται βίβλος βασιλεὺς μέγας Ἄλφει.
καὶ τότε αὖτ' ἐκείνη κατακτενοῦναι θέλει ἐδύο, μὴ μύρον, καὶ ἀδύο, καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦτο, μὴ μύρον, καὶ ἀδύο, καὶ ἀπὸ

Whensoever a mungrell Mule shall have the Crown, Wanton well fed, shall frisk it up and down
With tender hoofs; then fly and make no stay
To ask what is the news; away, away.

Crasus concluding with himself that there would never any Mule reign over the Medes instead of a Man, thence infer'd that his rule should be perpetual: not understanding that by a Mule, was understood Cyrus; because he was descended of two severall Nations; his Mother Mandane being of a better extract then his father Cambyses. For she was a Mede, and Astages the King his daughter; and he but a Persian when they were subject to the Medes. Herodotus lib. 1.

51. A Arceflaus being driven from his Kingdome with his Mother Pheresima, being at Samos; solicited all persons he could meet with in hope to regain his Country; and having got together a very considerable army, he sent to Delphos to consult the Oracle there about his return into his own Kingdome: to whom Pythia returned this answer. During the time of four Baras's, and as many Arceflaus's, to wit, eight Generations of men Apollo, hath granted thee to reign; and further exhorts thee to endeavour. And likewise persuades thee when thou art in thy own seat, to remain in peace; But if thou findest a furnace full of Pitchers or pots, be sure thou boil them nor, but fling them out; and if thou dost fire the Furnace, take heed of entering a place that is compassed with water, for if thou dost, thou shalt perish, and the Bull, do what he can. Arceflaus taking those forces he had gathered in Samos, returned to Cyrene, and having recovered his Kingdome, and somewhat

what settled his affairs, not minding the Oracle, he called his adversaries to Judgment, and those that he could lay hold on, he sent to Cyprus to be executed; whom the Cnidians when they were brought into their Countrey released, and sent them to Thera. Some that had privately conveyed themselves into a strong Tower-building combustible matter round, he burnt the Tower and all. When he had done, he began to remember this was that the Oracle had forbidden him, and went out of the City Cyrene fearing the death predicted, for he conceived Cyrene to be that circumfluous place he was warned to avoid; and betook himself to the King of Barceans called Alazeris whose Niece he had married, where some as well Barceans as Cyrenean. Exulting him walking in the forum set upon him, and divided both his and his Cosen Alazeris heads from their bodies. Herodotus lib. 4.

Nero Caesar being warned by some Mathematicians that the ruine of his Empire was portended by the Stars, but some of them differ'd in opinion in one thing, and some in another, at last being sick, he sent to Delphos to be resolved what should be the fate of his state; and received in answer this, That he should beware of the 73. year. Which when he heard, being an inconsiderate man, and scarce above thirty; he so wholly gave himself up to security, that he feared nothing, concluding that the Oracle had promised him a peaceable reign during his whole life, and that he could not dye before the appointed year set down by the Oracle, insomuch that he arrived to that height of insolence, vaine conceit, that having lost some precious jewells in a tempest, he was confident the fishes would export them to land for him, as they were in duty bound, in his conceit: With these fond extravagancies was he elevated, even till on a sudden he was left destitute by all his friends and subjects, and forced to a most ignominious end, so well did Apollo's Counsell steed him. But least this father of lies should seem to deliver any untruth, the night before his death he made Nero hear a voice, cursing the name of Nero, and extolling that of Galba, that so he might understand it was by the will and institution of the Oracle that he fell; for Galba succeeded him for the space of seventy three years. Petrarcha ex Suetonio.

Xerxes the Son of Darius, having dig'd up an old Monument of Belus, found an Urne of Glasse, in which a dead Corps lay in Oyl, but the Urne was not full, but empty a hands breadth from the hips of the body, near which there stood a little Pillar or column, on which was contained written, that it should go ill with him that opened the Sepulchre, and did not fill the Urne: which when Xerxes had read, he was taken with much dread and horreur, and commands presently Oyl to be powred into it, with which it was not full, he therefore commands again more Oyl to be bestowed upon it, and found that the Urne was nothing fuller, than before; yet he continues seeking to fill it, till he found that all his labour was in vain, and then the Monument being shut, he departs in great grief and sorrow, he had fifty myriads of men in an army designed against the Greeks, but returning, he miserably ended his life, being kill'd by night in the streets by the hands of his own son. Ælianus ex Herodoti, lib. 3.

54.

Srluefter the second, formerly called Gilbertus, a French man (as they say) by evill arts obtained the Popedom. When he was a young man, he was a Monk in a Monastery of Florence situated in the Aurelian Diocesse, but leaving the Monastery, the Devill followed him, to whom he wholly surrendered himself; he came to Hispalis a City of Spain to study, being very desirous of learning; in which he was so great a proficient, that in a short time, of a Scholler he became chief Master. Martinus testifies that Robert, King of France, and Lotharius, a man famous by Nobility and learning who was afterwards created Arch-Bishop of Sensensis were his Schollers; Gilbertus therefore, provoked by ambition and diabolical desire of governing, first by largesse and gifts, he obtained the Arch-Bishoprick of Rhemes, then of Ravenna, and lastly the Popedom it self, the Devill helping his endeavours herein, but upon this condition; That after his death he should be wholly his, by whose assistance he had got so great dignity; he moved the Devill to tell him how long he should continue Pope; the Enemy of mankind answering (as he is wont) ambiguously, If thou shalt not come near Jerusalem, thou shalt live long. When therefore in the fourth year and first Month of his Popedom the tenth day, he had sacrificed in the great Church of the Holy Crosse at Rome, he knew that by his fate he was to dye forthwith; he therefore repented and acknowledged his wickednesse before the people, and renouncing all ambition and diabolical fraud, he exhorted all to a good and pious life.

55.

When the Boetians wasted the Sea-coasts of Attica, and the Athenians were about their expedition against Egina, there comes an Oracle from Delphos that the Eginetians could not be hurt for thirty years; in the thirtieth year when the Eginetians had dedicated a Temple to Æacus that things might succeed with them, they began their war with them; but as they made violent war against them, so they received many losses and brought great detriment to themselves; and at the last were in great extremity when the Athenians heard of this Oracle, they likewise dedicated a Temple to Æacus, which is now to be seen in their Market-place, but they thought they were not to forbear war for thirty years, which time they heard to be fatally, but that if they forbore war they should receive many wrongs from the Eginetians. Herodotus lib. 5.

THE Wifedome of the Perſian Magics and their ſkill in divination is kept in memory by many Monuments, who as they fore old many things, ſo they predicted by many ſecret ſignes the cruelty that Alexander afterwards exerciſed againſt thoſe he ſubdued, and the miſerable ſlaughter that enſued, for when Ochus ſubdued the Government of the Perſians, one of them adviſed a certain Magician, one of the Eunuchs to obſerve (the Table being covered) upon what meat (amongſt all that the Table was furniſhed with) the King ſhould firſt lay his hands, who intently marking Ochus with both his hands ſtretched out, with his right hand he haſtily took to him a kiſſe, and with the other the biggeſt loaf upon the Table, which with ſteak upon the Board he carved; and ate heartily and chearfully, theſe two Prophets hereupon concluded, that there would enſue during his reign, fruits of the Earth in great plenty, and a reaſonable time to gather them, but frequent ſlaughters. Elianus lib. 2. et Diodor. lib. 17. Bibliotheca.

56.

Amongſt the Peſuſenſians which live above Halicarnasſus, it is reported that as often as any adverſe fortune is ready to ſeize upon the Amphienſians (who live near that City) a huge beard ſuddenly groweth upon the chin of their chief Prieſt of Minerva the Goddeſſe, which happened twice amongſt them. Herodotus, lib. 8.

57.

Beleſes a Chaldean, exhorted Arbaces General of the Medes, to invade the Kingdome of the Babylonians, promiſing to him certain victory, which after two years, and much loſſe by ſlaughter given and received on both ſides, undermining the City of Ninus King of Sardinapolis, he deſperately burned the Kings Pallace, and obtained it. Diodorus, lib. 2. cap. 7.

58.

THales the Mileſian, perceiving that the next year would be a very plentiful ſeaſon for oyl, (by the riſing of the ſeven Stars,) bargained afore-hand with his customers for all that years oyls at a greater rate, than otherwiſe, by reaſon of the great plenty, he could have ſold them for. And likewiſe foreſeeing the next year there would be a great ſcarcity, he aforehand bought up many mens oyls at a cheap rate; and the year following ſold them very dear, and thereby became rich. Falſos. lib. 8. cap. 11. and others. Pliny aſcribes this piece of policy to Democritus, and ſaies, That Sexius a Roman uſed the very ſame cunning at Athens. This man commanded his body, when he was dead, ſhould be buried in a very obſcure place of the Mileſian fields, foreſeeing that there ſhould be a forum or common Mart erected there by the Romans. Plutarchus in Solone.

59.

60.

AT Mnesarchus the common Cryer Bæotus was told by the Chaldeans, that his son should be victor in Contentions. Wherefore he would have had his son become a Fencer. But afterwards he set to write Tragedies, and therein was indeed the victor of all others. Gellius, lib. 15. cap. 20. who relates it out of Theopompus.

61.

THe Birth-day of the Emperour Augustus fortun'd to fall on that very time that Cataline's Cause of his Conjurat[i]on was a pleading in Court. And his Father Osavius staying a little longer than ordinary, excus'd himself, for that his Wife was newly brought to bed. P. Nigidius, then present, looking his birth-hour, is said to affirm, That then was born the Lord of the whole world. He being at Apollonia, went with Agrippa to Theogenes his Chamber; But when Theogenes had predicted most high things, as he thought, of Agrippa's birth-day, betwixt fear and shame, lest his destiny should prove inferiour, could hardly be perswaded to tell his Nativity. And when he declar'd it, Theogenes is said to have danced about with joy, and to have worshipp'd him; which somewhat animated Augustus; so that he afterwards published his destiny, and stamp'd a Coyn, with the sign of Capricorn, in which he was born. Sabellicus, lib. 8. Ennead. 6. ex Suetonio.

62.

VVhen Livia bore Tiberius Scribonius the Mathematician promised great matters; yea, and that he should reign one time or other; but without a regal diadem: For then you must understand, the power of Cæsars was altogether unknown and unheard of amongst them. Suetonius.

63.

Tiberius Cæsar, that he might learn the Art of the Chaldeans, had a teacher, one Thrasyllus. As often as he consulted about these kind of matters, he went into a private and out-house, suffering no one to be privy to his business, but one free-man onely. He was altogether unlearned, but of a robustious strong body, and had gone before him through roughs and craggs (for the house stood upon a rock); and this Thrasyllus his Art, Tiberius was resolv'd to try. For as he returned, if he suspected him of any fraud, he had resolv'd to precipitate him down a rock in his return, that there might no one remain privy to this his levity. After he had most exquisitely told Tiberius how he should be Emperour, and many other future events, he ask'd him, If he could calculate his own birth-day? He answered, Yes; and looking into his destiny, the more he look'd, the more he quak'd and trembled, and at last cry'd out, That some eminent and imminent danger attended him. When Cæsar saw this, he ran to him, embraced him, and told him what his danger was; promisi'g him, for that he knew it, he should be safe of it. On a time Tiberius as he was walking on the Sea shore with him him in much perplexity of mind, Thrasillus advised him to be of good comfort, and hope better things; but when he grew so distressed, that he was almost ready to cast himself into the Sea, being in great fear of his father in law Augustus, Thrasillus spying a Ship come sailing towards them, affirmed to him very confidently, That that very Ship brought him good tydings. The ship being put into the Haven, he received Letters from Augustus and Livia, whereby he was recalled to Rome, according to his hearts desire. Dion in Augusto.

C*laudius* the Emperour, a little before his death creating Consuls, predicted to them the moneth wherein he should dye; and having assured them of the very utmost limit of his time, in his last counsel he did obtest, that his sons should live brotherly and lovingly, commending them to the Senate, and professed it again and again to them that were present, (and who were very sorry, desiring the contrary) that he should dye as he had told them. Suetonius.

64.

N*ero* being born early in the morning before Sun-rising, a certain Astrologer looking into the course of the Stars, said, That he should reign at Rome, but should kill his own Mother, which when Agrippina his Mother heard, she said, Let him kill me, so he may be Emperour. The event declares, that the Astrologer predicted truth. Xiphilinus in Nerone.

65.

A*scletarion*, a Mathematician, being brought to Domitian the Emperour, because he was so bold as to predict somewhat concerning his end; when he did not deny but he had reported those things which by his Art he foresaw: Domitian growing very angry, commanded him to tell him what his own end should be; and he told him, To be torn to pieces by dogs, and that very shortly. Whereupon he presently commanded him to execution, and that body his should be burnt to ashes, and that the ashes should be buried, to try the truth, or rather to disprove the falshood of his assertions. But Fate would not be altered; for when the pile and all was prepared, an exceeding shower of rain came so violently, that all the executioners and company left the dead body by the pile; and, that while, the dogs came and tore it. While he was at Supper, Latinus his Jester telling him this amongst the rest, of that dayes fables and conceits; he was so enraged, as if from this time he had been past hope of life, and lay obnoxious to all the strokes of malevolent fortune. Sabellicus ex Suetonio.

66.

Domitian

67.

Domitian the Emperour, superstitiously given to Mathematical Predictions, and thereby being informed of the time of his death the day before he was killed, having fruit brought him as a Present, he commanded them to be set by, and kept till the next day; and saith, If I may, I will make use of them. And then then turning to them who were next to him, he saith; The Moon to morrow being in Aquarius will look red and bloody, which demonstrates some horrid wickedness, as all men throughout the World expect. He being advised by Mathematicians, to take heed of the fifth hour of that day, was solicitous to take their Judgment, What great mischance would come by reason thereof, who said, That it portended great mutation in the World. He therefore when that day came, sitting idly, and scratching a little Wart on his forehead, he broke it, so that some blood ran down his face; which seeing, he said, God grant I have no greater hurt then this. And enquiring what a clock it was, it was answered purposely, That it was the sixth hour; though it was the fifth hour, which he so much feared; whereupon thinking all danger past, he joyfully riseth, intending to refresh his body: but instantly his Chamberlain Parthenius came to him, telling, he was to speak with one in his bed Chamber upon an important business; whither coming, he received from him and his confederates seven wounds, whereof he dyed, in the fourty sixth year of his age, and fifteenth year of his reign. Sabellius, lib. 4. Ennead. 7.

68.

H Adrian the Emperour was not only excellent in other Arts, but also in Astronomy, which Marinus Max. doth so far declare, that he knew all things concerning himself; insomuch, that he foretold his Acts, which he should perform every day, even to the last hour of his life. It is manifest, that he told Verus, whom he adopted, That the Fates shew to terrene creatures what shall be done, beyond which nothing can proceed here: He wrote to that very year, yea and the moneth of that year in which he departed; and shewed, that he could not outlive that moneth. Fulgosus, lib. 8. cap. 11.

69.

Sextimus Suetonius Pertinax is said to have been a most skilfull Mathematician: When his wife Martia, the Mother of Basilius was dead, he calculated the Nativities of all about him, and finding that Julia, though not nobly descended, yet by the Planet under which she was born, it was signified, that she should be Emperesse, he took her to wife, who was the Mother of Greia Valerianus. The same man travelling towards Brittanie, told, That he should not thence return, and that in the roof of the Palace, in which he used to sit in Judgment, he left his predictions in writing, so that all men might see them wholly, except that part of them which treated of the hour of his birth. Xiphilinus Dionis Nirei abbreviator, in Severo.

70.

A Certain Egyptian from the Alendofan coast, coming to Constantinople, went into an Inn, the hostesse whereof was a skillfull Midwife, who as soon as she had drawn some Wine for her guest, tells him with an extended loud voice, that a friend of hers now in labour of her third child was in great danger unless she had speedy help, whereupon she suddenly left the Egyptian, went and helped the woman from the misery of her travell or labour, and returns to her guest, who being angry for her absence, she relateth the cause of her stay. He exactly observed the time and hour of the day; Go, said the Midwife, and tell the Woman in childbed that she hath brought forth one that shall be able to do more then the Emperour; which said, she carouseth a whole bowl of Wine, and told what the Infant's name should be; and accordingly afterwards he was named Abraham, who had such excess of fortune, that in the time of Constantine the Great, he was made Prætor, by which office he could do more then the Emperour. Eunapius, in Orto Edossis.

71.

Two Jews, Astrologers and Magicians, promised Zira Prince of the Arabians, Empire and long life, if he would demolish the Christian Temples and Images of Saints, which he put in execution; but before a whole year came about, he died, and his Son intended to punish the Impostors, but they fly into Isauria (where Leo, who after Theodosius the third Emperour was cast down, was called Isaurus) they find a boy of mean birth, but endued with a most excellent and towardsly wit and genius; they tell him that he should be Emperour, and that so confidently, that they swore by many Oaths, that the event should answer their predictions, if he would but do what they desired; and he promised to do whatever they prescribed. Afterwards Leo obtains the Empire, in the ninth year after, they require the performance of his promise and seek nothing but that he will abolish the pictures of Christ and his Mother. The Emperour in observance of his promise puts down all Images, and heavily punished all that worshipped or kept them. Cuspinianus Zonara.

72.

Simon Prince of the Bulgarians, led his Army against the Cyrians, and fighting them in narrow places betwixt Mountains, lost all his Army, a certain man named John, a Magician and Astrologer comes to Lucianus the Roman Emperour, and adviseth him that he should send some body who might cut off the head or top of a Pillar which was placed over the Arch made in the remembrance of the Victory of Xerolophus, and over against the Sun-setting, promising that thereupon Simeon, (to whom it was fatal) should presently perish, and in the same hour the head of the statue was cut off, (as it was afterwards found by diligent inquisition made) that Simeon died by the grief or sicknesse of his heart. Cedrenus.

73.

Guido Maltraversus, Earl of Patavin, and Knight of Lurio, had a Son called Nicholas by Constantia the daughter of Obizius Marcones an Estensian, whom Jambonus Andreas, as well a Magician as an Astrologian, did predict a pernicious Citizen to his country, and moved his Father if possibly he could to disinherit him. Guido dyes, whereby Nicholas becomes powerfull in Riches and credit, conspires with Canis Scaligerus, the destruction of his Country: whereupon is raised a most bloody war, in which as it is reported, an hundred thousand men and upwards were slain. So the event proved the prophecy of Jambonistatus. Bernhardus Scardonius Blandus, lib. 8. Decad. 2.

74.

The French men having thier Centrall Guido Appius, and fighting against Martinus, besieged the Town of Livius, at that time when the Sicilians celebrated the French Vespers. Guido Renatus, Prince of the Forlunian Astronomers, and without doubt a Magitian also, foretold the Earl of Mount-ferrat, that the day before the Calends of May, he should make a sally contrary to the expectation of all men, whereby he should obtain most assuredly victory over his enemies, but that he should receive a wound in his hip: and being a skillfull Physitian and Surgion, he took with him Ovals, Glitters, and necessary things with him to bind up his wound, when he sallied out against the Enemy, nor was the event contrary to this presage, for the French were overthrown. Platina in Martine. 4. Blandus lib. 8. Decad. 2.

75.

Antiochus Tiberius excellent in Chiromancy, Piromancy, and Physiognomy at Crusea, foretold to Guidon a servant, whose surname was Guerra, that upon suspicion of infidelity, he should be killed by his intimate friend. To Pandulph the Tyrant he also told that he should be banished to Salastia in Armenia, should in extreme poverty dye a banished man: and not long after Pandulphus killed Guidon, for that he was jealous of his fidelity: and commits Antiochus himself to Prison, that he might try the event of his presages. Antiochus so far prevailed with the daughter of the Jaylor that he obtained of her a rope, by which he was let down out of the Prison into a Ditch, but being by the noise of his shackles discovered, he was taken as he was flying away, and brought back heavily beaten for his escape, and he and the maid both secured. At length Pandulphus, a banished man, poor and forsaken of all men, died in a poor Inn. So many things were portended to befall Tiberius himself, which notwithstanding his warning, he could by no means avoid. Jovius, in Elogio.

76.

Petrus Leonius of Spoletis, a famous Physitian who first opened a dore to the learned Art of Physick publishing Galen's most studious labours therein, he was a most dexterous Astronomer and Magitian, and therefore knowing that his sudden death was portended tended to him by the danger of water to avoid frequent Navigations, he departed from Pelavius and the Venetians to Umbra and Spoleto; Shortly after being invited to the company of Lawrence a Physician, he by the fallacious Art of Astronomy predicted to him recovery of his health and present deliverance from a sickness, under which he grievously laboured, which made him neglect all means to obtain his former health by rejecting Lazarus Placentinus an illustrious Physician, who sent to him by Lewis Sfortia, brought Physick to him, when it was too late by reason of his neglect. Wherefore Antiochus blamed and hated of all men after the death of Lawrence, whether by his own desperate action, or by the violence of Peter the Son of this Lawrence it is uncertain, he was precipitately drowned in a stinking ditch belonging to a Town near adjacent. Jov. in Elogiis.

B Artholomeus Cocles, a Bononian. Scholler to Antiochus, and a most exquisite Palmist and Physiognomist, warn'd Goricus the Astrologer, that he should beware, lest he suffered most violent tortures when he was at Leucas. But he not minding his advice in his Ephemerides that a little after he made, predicted, that Joannes Bentivolus should be thrust both out of his Country and Government, for which the Tyrant caus'd him to be five times tossed in a cord; And so he received the reward of his Art. This same Cocles told one Coponus, that he would very shortly commit a most horrid murder; and also told Hermes the King's son, That he should be banished and kill'd in fight. Hermes therefore commands Coponus to kill Cocles his evil Prophet. Cocles foresaw his danger of death by his art, and therefore wore a private helmet to defend himself, and alwayes carried a great two-handed sword. But Coponus in the habit of a Porter (whilest he was earnest in unlocking his door, which Coponus had before prevented, by putting a little wire into the lock, that he might have the better opportunity for his design) beat out his brains with an Ax: and being questioned for it, alledged no other thing for the fact, but that he was incited thereto by Cocles his own self, telling him that he must be a murderer, and nothing else. Jovius in Elogiis.

77.

A Certain Astrologer in the Court of Frederick the second, Emperour, much revered Rodolphus the Hapsburgensian Earl with exceeding observance, though he had but a mean estate, and valued not at all men far more potent; and being demanded a reason thereof by the Emperour; he answered, I know that Rodolphus shall be Emperour, and when thy Issue shall decline, his renown shall be spread abroad far and near, though he be esteemed by few at this time: Neither did his presage want a true event, for in the year of our Lord, 1273. in the Calends of October, he was chosen King of the Romans by the Princes of Germany at Franckford, when he besieged the Pallace. Cuspianus, in Caesaribus.

78.

79.

When the Mathematicians looked into the Geniture of the Great Sfortia, and observed the excellent positure of the Stars, and their admirable sites and aspects they predicted to him, High Empire, immortal glory, and a happy off-spring; but at length they added, That he should not attain old age, but should perish by an untimely death. Jovius, in ejus vita.

80.

Baccius, the excellent Montenensian Duke, seeing the body of his Enemy, Sfortia the Great, drowned in the River of Piscaria, fell a praising the dead man with most exquisite Encomiums, which of right belonged to him: but he not being freed from so great danger of a present battle, shewed to his Souldiers a more cheerful countenance; because he, being conscious of a fatal secret, had learned from Astrologers, that Sfortias indeed was to go before, as taken with a violent death, but a little after himself also, as it were with the like lot, should undergo the same fortune of departure: He scarce lived over the fifth moneth, when as for thirteene moneths space, making assaule at Aquila; and it being in vain besieged, at length in a memorable battel, being overcome and slain by the sword of the Sfortian Souldier, he fulfilled both the truth of the Stars, and many prophets. Jovius, in the life of Sfortias.

81.

Unto Uladislaus Jagellon, King of the Polanders, Sophia his wife brought forth sons, Uladislaus and Andrew Casimir; There was at Cracovia, Henry a Bohemian, a famous Astrologer, and studious of Magick; this man foretold, That an Infant new born, should be long-lived, but unfortunate; and that he reigning, Poland should be afflicted with great evils and calamities: but his brother Uladislaus was to be most famous, and most victorious: and unless Nature's destinies should envy a longer life to him, he should command many Nations. Both which things the issue afterwards proved; For Uladislaus, who was chosen King of Poland, and King of Hungary, being slain at Varna by the Turks, in the 20th year of his age, gave not satisfaction to his famous hope. But Casimir, who succeeded his brother in the Kingdom of Poland, reigned 45 years, lived 64, was bent rather on the Lituanian huntings, than on the Common-wealth. Cromer. book 19. & 29.

82.

Bafil, a Mathematician, but most certain soothsayer, a certain Greek, foretold the murder of Alexander of Medicis, Duke of the Florentines, to be committed by Laurence Medicis, his near kinsman; he not onely shewed him the murder, but also the certain smiter, who should be intimate with him, of a slender form, of a boxy-coloured countenance, and of a doubtfull silence, almost not keeping company at all with others in the Court. Also unto Cosmus of Medices they promised for certain, forasmuch as in the very marking the hour of his birth, he had a happy Star of Capricorn, corn, as once Augustus, enlightened with a wonderfull aspect of Stars agreeing together, it should come to passe, that he should increase in a wealthy inheritance. Alexander indeed hearing it, and Cosmus smiling, when as a great number of his kindred was to be consumed by death, before any, even a small inheritance, could come unto him. Jovius.

John Liechtenberg, in the yearly predictions of his Ephemeris, as I may so say, admonished the Prince of Bavaria, in a serious manner, both by writing and painting, that a Lyon should seek hiding places for fear of an Eagle. He despised it; but not long after he was assaulted with a grievous War by Maximilian the Emperour. Agricola in Germane Proverbs.

83.

Paul Farnese the 3d, chief Bishop, seeing he was most skillfull in Astrology and Magick, writeth to his son, Peter Aloffe, who had by force entred on the tyrannical Government of Placentia and Paema, that he should beware of the tenth day of September, of the year 1547, as unlucky to him. The father indeed could warn, but the son could not avoid the danger; but by Conspirators, Augustine Landus, and James Scott, Earls of Placentia, in his own Castle, under pretence of talk, he was slain; and being a long time hung up by the privy parts, he was exposed to be cruelly torn in pieces by the people. Sleidan. 19 book of Commentaries.

84.

There was a Town of the Xanthians, that had a bridge laid over the small River Lyeus, in which were said to have been brazen Tables, wherein letters were ingraven. The Empire of the Persians was sometime to be overthrown by the Gracians. The tables with the bridge being shaken down, a little before that it was fought at Granicum by Alexander the Great, they had fallen into the channel of the River: Alexander being much moved at the report of the tables, when as for some time he had stood doubtful, into which part he might chiefly bend the course of victory, turning to the right hand, he subdued with wonderfull speed all the Sea-coast from Lydia even into Phenicia. Sabellicus book 4. Ennead. 4. out of Plutarchs Alexander.

85.

In the second Carthaginian war, besides many things seen and heard, which were accounted instead of wonders; a verse or song of Martius being curious, and sounded at the same time, brought the greatest care to the City. That being by a most true event proved, gave no doubtfull credit of the things that were to be. He had written; who ever that Martius was; O thou Trojan born, flee thou Canna the River of Romana, neither let strangers constrain thee to joyn in battell in the field of Diomedes: but neither shalt thou believe me, unrill thou shalt fill up the field with blood and the River shall bring down many thousands of thine slain out of a fruitfull land, into the great Sea for fishes and birds and wild

86.

beasts

beasts which inhabit the Earth, unto these let thy flesh be for meat. Because these things were in great part represented before the eyes of men (for the common sort were acquainted both with the fields of Diomedes, and when they had fought at Canna) there was the greater care of procuring another Verse; which was written in these words: Ye Romane enemies, if ye will drive away the impostume, which commeth from far Nations, I Judge; playes are to be vowed to Apollo, the which let them be faithfully done every year to Apollo, when the people shall give a part in publique, let private persons prepare to use them for them and theirs. Over these sports the Prætor or Major shall be chief, he who shall administer the greatest right to the people and the multitude. And let the ten chief men, or Decemviri after the custome of the Greeks perform holy things by sacrifice. These things if ye shall rightly do, ye shall alwayes rejoyce, and your affairs shall wax better, for that God shall put out the stubborn enemy, which feedeth pleasantly on your fields. This verse being openly interpreted, sports were vowed to Apollo, and solemnized in a Circle. Sabellie, book 4. Ennead. 5.

87.

Procopius the Tyrant being slain by Valens the Emperour, the Walls of Chalcedon (because the Citizens of that City had favoured Procopius his party) were made equal with the ground. The which while it was done, they found a table of stone in their foundations, on which these words were written:

When Nymphs shall nigh the holy City dance,
And wayes adorn'd with garlands; and by chance,
After the wretched walls for placing baths
Shall be converted, burning in maddish wrathes,
A thousand shapes of men for greedy prey
From divers Nations thou shalt see (I say)
With forces strong, alas, to go beyond
The Isirian and Cimmerian Sea-ey bond,
Then Scythick people, then the Masian Land Shall be destroy'd with slaughter's bitter hand.
When at the length unto the Men of Thrace
The covetous lust of gain leading a Trace;
The cruel barbarism shall make a breach,
It shall be quenched by Ior's partial reach.

This Prophecy was not then understood, but was afterward fulfilled, when Valens had built a conveyance for water, and had brought abundance of waters to the City. For, the walls being overthrowen, he made use of the stones for the conveyance of the water, which he called Valense by his own name, that he might gratifie the Townesmen, and the baths might be holpen by this bringing of water, although some called them Constantius his baths. At length, Clearch, Governour of the City, in a place whose name is Taurus, afterward called, The street of Theodosius, built Nymphæum, or a washing-place, that he might shew the grace and pleasantness of the water brought in. By these buildings, the stony table signified the coming even now, of the Barbarians, who in Thrace it self, after destructions or robbings of the people made, were all slain. Cassianus, in Valens.

is

IN the sixth year of Justin the Great, the City Edesa was miserably defiled with uncleanness; and of the River Scirtus, and in the bank of the River a Table of stone found, written on, in Hieroglyphical or mystical Egyptian letters to this purpose:

88.

That is,

The River Scirtus shall dance or leap for the mischief of the Citizens. Cedrenus.

UNto Alexander the Great going out of India to Babylon, Nearchus Admiral of the Navy, who had returned from the Ocean, being carried into Euphrates, sheweth him, that certain Chaldeans had gathered themselves together, who warned him, that he should abstain from Babylon. He being nothing moved, went forward notwithstanding; where he perished. Plutarch, in Alexander.

89.

VV Hen. L. Vitellius for the favour of Herod the Tetrarch, would lead an Army against the Arabians, they report, Attas, King of the Arabians, (news being received of the dispatch of Vitellius,) to have gathered by sooth-sayings, that it was impossible for that Army to have come to the rock. For one of the Captains was first to dye, either he which may prepare the War, or he by whose command it may be provided, or him against whom it is to be moved. Neither was the divination vain. For when Vitellius was as yet at Jerusalem, a message being brought concerning Tiberius Caesar his death, he made the Expedition void. Josephus, book 18. chap. 7.

90.

A Pollonius an Egyptian, foretold the death of Caius Caligula, Emperor of the Romans, who for that cause being sent to Rome, was brought to Caius that day, in which he was to dye the death. Xiphiline, the abbevistour of Dio, in Caligula.

91.

A Pollonius the Thanean, the son of Jupiter, foretold, That Olus, a certain man beyond measure lascivious, should be killed on the third day, and that so fell out. Phylagras, in his life.

92.

Laginus

93. L Arginus Proculus foretold openly in Germany, That Dominian, Emperour of the Romans, was to dye the death, on which day he departed out of life. And when for this cause, by him who was chief over the Province, he was sent to Rome, he then also affirmed it should be so. Therefore he was condemned for a capital matter. But Dominian nevertheless could not escape the danger of life, because on the same day he was killed. Xiphiline.

94. J Julian, Emperour, moving against Constance, pierced Illyricum, daily espying the intrails of beasts and birds, that he might contemplate of the issue. At which time a certain Souldier lifting up the intrails with his hand, being fallen flat on the ground, he cryed out, many hearing him, The Trojane was fallen, Constance should dye with the Mopsoctenians in Cilicia. The which, he saith, should be by and by verified from Ambassadoury. Cuspinian.

95. A Alexander Severus, Emperour, when as he spake unto his Army in France, desiring to begin his speech from a lucky word, Fortune brought a contrary one, the which was received as an evil token; for he began, Helioabalus the Emperour being slain, beginning his speech from the Emperours death. But when from thence he went unto the Persian War, an outrageous woman spake these words in the French tongue; Go thy way, neither promise victory to thy self, neither rely thy self on the faithfulness of thy Souldiers. That which was rightly told, the event taught, he himself not long after being killed by his Souldiers. Fulgus, in book 1. chap. 3.

96. A Certain woman meeting the two Maximines in the Julian Market-place, (when they came against the Senate with an Army) with her hair spread abroad, and a black garment, calling on the Maximines with a great voyce, fell down dead before their feet. After a few dayes, the Army slew the Maximines in the same place.

97. W Hen Dioclesian, as yet warring in lesser places, stayed at Tungrin in France, in a certain Tavern, and had familiar company with Druys a certain woman, and she blamed the niggardliness of the man, he is reported to have answered in jest, not in earnest, Then he would be liberal, when he should be Emperour. To these words she saith, Do not jest, O Dioclesian, plainly thou shalt be Emperour, and also thou shalt kill a Boar. Which word indeed of the woman, he taking in the room of a fore token, began diligently to follow wild Boars in hunting; not understanding, to wit, the riddle of the Prophecies, which the issue afterward declared. For Numerian, Emperour, had been slain by the faction of Arrius [Aper] which signifies a Boar. Which thing being brought to light, the Souldiers chose Dioclesian the revenger, and with one one accord salute him Emperour. He therefore after an assembly had; whereby he might fulfill the saying of Drusus, thrusts Aper thorow with his own hand; adding that of Maro —

Aeneas manu dextra cadis —

Thou fall'st (thou dost not stand)
By great Aeneas his right hand. Cuspinian.

Zeno Emperour of Constantinople, asked some secrets of Marian, a most wise Earl, Who should succeed him in the Empire? He answered, One of the Silentiaries shall take thy Empire and Wife; but me thou shalt unjustly kill. Both of these the end proved in its time.

98.

Agilulph, Duke of the City Taurina, when as he brought unto Authar King of the Longobards, his Bride Theodolinda, the daughter of the King of Boiaria, had a Soothsayer with him, who by the stroak of a Thunder bolt foretold unto him, that a little after, he should enjoy the Bride her self, and the Kingdom: and that thing the issue proved to be true. For Authar being killed in War, Agilulph succeeded him in his Kingdom and wedlock. Paul Deason, of the deeds of the Longobards, chap. 14.

99.

Antonine the son of Sosipater and Eustathius the Cappadocian, had a school at Canobicum the door of Nilus. He foretold to his Schollars, that after his death the Temples of Serapis (a god of the Egyptians) should be overthrown. The event confirmed the prophesie, under Theodosius the Emperour. Eunapius, in Edeffo.

100.

Remex a certain Rhodian, being estranged or angry in his mind, began to witness with a loud voyce, that before the thirtieth day there should be very great slaughters and robberies at Dyrhachium in Greece, and fire and flight, but the Navy it self to return home. When Cn. Pompey, who being Pretor, was chief over the Navy, had heard that, and had told it unto three men, Cicero, Varro, and Cato, all being moved; also some of them are said to be exceedingly affrighted. But the space of a few dayes coming between, Labienus fleeing out of the battel in Thessaly brought news of the overthrow of the Legions, and that the Army of Pompey was scattered in a great battel; by and by the publique corn was snatched out of the barns, and scattered abroad through the whole City; they that were there, having departed with a headlong flight, were both forsaken by the Rhodians, and being unwilling to follow, the ships were burnt.

101.

102.

Procopius in his third book of the Vandall-war sheweth, that there was wont to be an old Proverb tossed up and down in Carthage by the children, that Gamma should sometimes persecute Beta, and again, Beta, Gamma. I think the childrens sport to have looked hitherto, that between neighbours there might oftentimes rise discord. But this childish saying was wrested unto the event of things, because Genferick King of the Vandalls had expelled Boniface. Afterwards Belisarius, Gilimer. The Proverb arose, not from what happened, but was a Riddle of the Carthaginian Children, as an Oracle of that which happened afterwards. Erasmus, in his adagies.

103.

There stood Tombs in the LeuBrián field, of the daughters of Scedafus, which they call LeuBrides from the place. For by chance, when they were by force ravished by the Spartan-guests, they had been buried in that place. That so cruell and wicked act being committed, their father having wished for curses on the Spartans, when he could not by request obtain revenge from Lacedemon, stabbed himself upon their Sepulchres. From thence the Prophecies and Oracles daily foretold the Spartans they should avoid and turn away the LeuBrián revenge by the gods. But that thing many did not so understand, but doubred of the place, because also a little Town placed on the shore of Laconia is named LeuBrión. Besides there is a neighbouring place of that name in Megalopola of Arcadia. At length the Lacedemonians being in the LeuBrián field of Acetia overcome with a most cruell slaughter by the Thebans, lost their rule. Plutarch in the life of Pelopidas.

104.

There was with M. Anthony [the triumvir or] one of the three chief men of Rome, a certain Magitian of Egypt, who had often moved Anthony that he might withdraw himself from Octavius. Thy fortune, (saith he) O Anthony, is of it self famous and large, but when it cleaves to Octavius, it is continually blunted. Thy demon or spirit seareth his Genius or Angell: and when as it is of it self high and cheerfull, yet at the approach of this, it is made low and fearfull. He the more easily gave him credit, because whether by lots, or pairs of Cocks and Hens, or Quails committed to hand, Anthony was alwaies inferiour to Octavius. He therefore being stirred with these things, going with Octavia, from whom he had already begotten a little daughter out of Italy, sailed unto Athens. Sabellus in his ninth book, Ennead. 6.

105.

Most ancient Prophets had sung, It was wickednesse for Romane weapons to go beyond Ctesiphon a Town, and the Captains that dared to do it, were to receive punishment. They think M. Crassus purposing that thing, to have perished with his Army. M. Ulpus having attempted to go beyond Trajanum, recovered not Italy, and to have lost five Provinces on the other side Tygris presently, and he had been better not to have undertaken the journey, he wasted wasted, and almost consumed his legions of Soldiers with long pains. And although the Conquerour drew out his bounds farther, yet he profited not much; desiring to go beyond Ctesiphon, Tygris being overcome; Valerian was taken by Sapor King of the Persians. But Odenatus Palmyrene, a conquerour of Romane Majesty, came beyond Tygrin, even to Ctesiphon. Carus, Emperour, led the Army of Probus, a large conquerour, from the Sarmatian War into Persia, he wasted the Enemies Kingdom, he vanquished Seleucia compassed about with Euphrates, the which Alus, the true Antonine, had in times past taken. And then he requiring or assaulting Ctesiphon, and willing to proceed farther, either a disease, or the stroke of a thunder-bolt in a troublesome and lightning heaven took him away. Cuspinian.

Serbill prophesied of the destruction of Antichrist:

106.

Αἰὼν ὁ αὐτοῦ καὶ ὁ ὅλος ὅτις αὐτὸν ἐκείνῳ.

Again, he then an evill time shall see,

When his own Net will his destruction bee.

Some understand by the snare or net, the place, wherein Antichrist is to be choaked. Theodore Bibliander, a most learned man, of the Art of Printing, whose matter is flax steeped and glewed together, to wit, paper, with this flax Antichrist shall be dispatched, because it is that in which the holy Gospel of Christ, and all the Prophets (being written together) are contained: by whose authority, as it were, by the breath of Christ's mouth, the three-headed Beast shall be brought to destruction.

Pammenicus took away Tementes, King of Egypt. The god Ammon had answered Tementes, asking counsel of the Oracle concerning the Kingdom; That he should beware of the Cocks. Pammenicus using familiarly Pierriatus, a Carian, when he had known from him, that the first of chief Carians put Cocks on the top of their heads; he understood the mind of the Oracle, and hired a great multitude of Carians, and led them toward Memphis, and pitched his Camps beside the Temple of Isis, in the Palace, which was distant from the City five furlongs: and a fight being begun, he got the victory. From these Carians, a certain part of Memphis was called Caro-memphites. Polynæus, book 7. & Herodotus.

107.

Serbill foretold, That the warlike glory of the Macedonians gotten, Philip the son of Amintas reigning, in the times of another Philip should go backward:

108.

The glory of Macedon's people, of Arcadia's Kings,
What Philip reigning, sometimes profits, sometimes losses brings.

For one, the greater of the two, his Captains shall impose
On people strange and Cities, but (forsooth) by Western foes;
The lesse shall tamed be in years to come, and by and by Illustrious honours he shall lose by Eastern destiny.

For the Romans, who are to the West, by the ayd of Attalus, and the Myrians, who lye toward the rising of the Sun, deprived Per- seus the son of Philip, both of his Kingdom and life. Pausanias, in Achaick affairs.

109.

Under Boleslaus the chaste Prince of the Polanders, in the Territory of Cracovia, a certain Man-child having teeth, on the same day in which he was born, spake distinctly, and point by point, untill being a young beginner in Christian Religion, he lost both his teeth, and the use of speech. But another six moneths old in the City of Cracovia, spake, That the Tartarians should come; and he foretold, they should cut off the heads of the Polonians: and being asked, he answered, he knew that thing from God, and that evil hung over his own head also; which after the twelfth year came to passe.

110.

HAli Abenragell, makes mention, That in the King's Pallace he saw an Infant born, which, scarce as yet twenty four hours were finished, began to speak, and make signs with the hand. At which thing the King being exceedingly astonished, a greater miracle happened; For he saith, The King standing by, and my self also with many others, the Infant cryed out, saying, I am unhappily born to disclose the losse of the Kingdom, and the destruction and desolation of the Nation. Which words being pronounced, he fell down dead. Cælius, book 29. chap. 14.

111.

Phericides the son of Bades, a Syrian, a hearer of Pittacus, walking on the Samian shore, when he had seen a certain Ship running with full sayls, he foretold, That a little after, it should be sunk; and it happened, he beholding it. Laertius and Apollonius in their History of wonderful things. Also Apollonius the Tyanean, having gotten a Vessel fit enough to sail in, when he had reached Leucus, about to go to Achaia, Let us go down, saith he, out of this Ship.
But she, although then quiet, a little after was overwhelmed. Phi- lostratus. Mithridates besieging Cyzicum, Aristagoras said, he had received from Minerva, that he being a pleasant singer, would bring the Trumpeter into the Lybick Sea, therefore he bade the Citizens to be of good courage. And straightway the South-wind blowing more strongly, Mithridates his Navy was troubled, and their warlike Engines for the most part cast asunder. Cælius, book 20. chap. 24.

They

They tell, that Phercydes sometimes thirsting in the Island Scyrim, desired water from one of his Schollars; the which when he had drank, he pronounced, That after three dayes there was to be an Earthquake in that Island; which saying, as the end proved it true, he brought back great glory. Apollonius, History of Wonders.

112.

Glaucus the son of Epicydides, a Spartan, when as he had received a great sum of money from Milesius, a guest, under the name of a aeppositum or pledge, and after his death, his sons had required the money. Glaucus after four moneths avouched, that he would give an answer. In the mean time he enquired of the Oracle at Delphos, Whether by denying (through a suborned oath) the money laid up with him, he should make a gain? Pythia answered;

113.

It may indeed, for bold-fac'd Glaucus, turn to present gain,

Thus by an oath to conquer, and by robbery, to detain

The moneys. Afterward 'tis death to swear, but he the man

That consciously regards an oath, sustaineth with his hand.

But of the oath the Lad is alway mindful, neither hee

With hands nor feet as swift doth make approach, but if of thee

He taketh hold, will all thy house and progeny destroy,

But th'after stock of swearer just, shall better things enjoy.

Glaucus being affrighted with that answer, prayed for pardon or leave. But Pythia affirmed, the same is to tempt God, and to do it. Glaucus indeed being returned home, restored the money to the young men of Milesim, but not long after, his whole house and offspring was wholly put out. Herodotus, book 6.

114.

Alphonsus, King of Arragon and Sicily, besieged Neapolis; a certain man came to him of a reverend countenance, and forerold, that he should conquer the City about the Calends of June; but not much after, a doubtfull battle was to be, in which the Captain should be taken, perswading him, that he would not commit himself to so great danger. The former part of the Prophecie was true; For on the 4th of Nones of June, he reduced the City into his power. A little after being about to fight in battle against Anthony at Caudola, in the Campanian field, his friends disswading him, and objecting unto him the Prophecie; he answered; Death indeed will not affrighten a valiant man; much lesse doubtfull Oracles. A battel being made, he was overcome and taken at Caudola, Æt. Sylv. book 2. Com. on Panormitan's Alphonsus.

Agathius

115. A Gastius in his second book of the Gothish War, saith, that, the Germanes to have used sometime women for Prophetesses; like-wile with a most true event: Plutarch in Caesar calls them holy women; and they guessed at things to come, by the whirlpools, and noyle of Rivers. Caesius, book 18. chap. 20.

116. A Baris the son of Seuthius a divine of the Hyperboreans, or those above the North-wind, wrote Oracles in the Countries which he wandred thorow, which are at this day extant. He also foretold earth-quakes, Plagues, and the like, and heavenly things. They say when he had come to Sparta, that he warned the Laconi-ans of turning away evils by holy things, which things being finished, no Plague afterward was at Laedemon. Apolonius in Hist. of Wonders.

117. Æ Defius the son of Chrysanthius a Philosopher of Sardis had a body so nimble, that it exceeded the belief of all and was plainly carried up on high. There was such a nearness to him with a god, that there was no need of a Crown of bayes to be placed on his head; but true Oracles, and framed to the proper likeness of a spirit blown up by a power. He onely beholding the Sun, would powre forth speech, although he neither knew the Law or order of Verses, nor yet well knew the Rules of Grammar. Eunapius.

158. T Here is at Sparta, before the Altar of Augustus, in the Market place a brazen portraiture of Agias. They say this Agias to have divined unto Lysander that he should conquer the navy of the Athenians at the River Egos, besides 10. Gallies with Oares, which by flight betook themselves into Cyprus. Pausan. in Lacon.

119. P Hilumena a soothsaying maide, whose familiarity Apelles the heretick, on as some will, Severus used. To this maide the Devil by an Apparition, in the habit of a boy answered; sometimes saying, he was Christ, sometimes Paul. He also wrought miracles, amongst which that is a chief, that he cast a great loaf of bread into a glasse viall of a most narrow mouth; and lifted him up with the tops of his fingers untire, and with that bread alone, as with meat given her from God, he said she should be contented. Augustine is witnesse.

120. T He same blessed Augustine in his first book against the Academicks, delivereth that there was a man at Carthage; by name Albigerius, of a reproachfull life, who had known all secrets, so that when he was asked a question by a Scholler of Romantian, unto whom Augustine writeth for trialls sake, what thing he thought of? He answered, a Verse of Virgil. when he was again asked asked by the same Scholler what Verse? he repeated that. Cardane of diversenesse of things, Book 8. ch. 43.

Isaac Angell, Emperour of the Greeks, going to Rideston, a Sea-Cuy, came to Basilacium, a man of an unaccustomed life, and who had obtained that opinion amongst all, as that he could foresee and foretell things to come. He uttered words confused, disagreeing among themselves, and doubtfull. The paps of women com-ming to him being searched, and their Ankles handled, he drew our dark Oracles or speeches, and to many questions he answered nothing, and finished his divinations with runnings to and fro, and mad gestures. There stood little old women by him, his kinf-women, who explained to those that asked Counsell, what those behaviours of Basilacium might foreshew of things to come, and interpreted his silence as a wise speech. He answered nothing to the Emperours saluting him, neither gave he thanks by a silent nod of his head, but leaping hither and thither like a mad man, cursed those that came to him. Constantine of Mesopotamia, especially who was then most familiar with Isaac. At length with a walking staffe which he carried in his hands, the eyes of the Emperours Image, which was painted in the wall of his privy Chamber of speaking, being scraped out, he also endeavoured to take the cap off from his head. The Emperour despising him as a doting or raving person returned. But not long after, he was by his brother Alexius deprived of both eyes and Empire, and the opinion of Basilacium was confirmed, the which had been at the first uncertain and doubtfull in many things. Nicet, book 33.

121.

Hector Boethius in the Scottish affairs saith, it was a common report, that Merline was begotten by the copulation of a spirit called Incubus, and a Brittish woman of a Noble blood, of whom Vincent, in a 1. book History 30. thus telleth. King Vortiger, counsell being taken what he ought to do for defence of himself, commanded cunning workmen to be called into him, who should build a most strong Tower. But when as the Earth swallowed up their works, they perswaded the King, that he should search out a man without a father, with whose blood the stones and mortar might be sprinkled, as if by that means the mortar would be made firm. Therefore the young man Merline by name, was found, who with his Mother is brought before the King, who confesseth he was conceived by a spirit in Mans shape. This Merline revealed many dark things, and foretold things to come. For he opened that under the foundation there was a lake, under the Lake two Dragons lay hid, whereof one being red, did signify the people of the Brittains, but the other being white, of the Saxons, and he also prophesied, that Marcius Ambrosius, Merline being overcome, and Vortiger burnt, should reign. War, b. 1. ch. 46. of the Delusions of Devils.

122.

123.

Cælius writeth, there was in his Countrey a poor desolate woman in a low or obscure place named Jacoba, out of whose belly he himself (and indeed an innumerable company of others, not onely at Rodigium, but also almost all Italy) heard the voice of an unclean spirit, very small indeed; but yet, when he would, distinct, and altogether to be understood; when as the mind of the great ones that was greedy of that which was to come, desired oftentimes this belly-speaking woman to be sent for, and stripped of all her cloathing, lest any thing of secret deceit should lye hid. The name of the Devill was Circinnatulus. He much delighting in this name, a little after answered to one calling for him. If thou shalt demand of things past and present, what things might be most hidden, he gave oftentimes wonderfull answers. If of things to come, always most false. But also his ignorance he sometimes more truly discovered by an uncertain muttering or humming. Cælius Book 8. ch. 10. of old readings.

124.

Adrian Turneb, the Kings professour of the Greek tongue, testified that he saw Peter Brabantius a crafty man, very like to Euræclius Aristophanes: who as often as he would, so often he spoke from the neth, most part of his body with unmoved lips; and by this imposture or couzenage of the Devill, he blinded the eyes of many in many places. For when he would be love-sick, for a certain beautifull maid of Paris, nor could perswade her mother, that he might espouse her to himself; at length when they willingly and on both sides talk together of this matter, he uttereth a voice out of his body, in which the dead husband of the poor woman seemed to complain of the greatnesse of the punishments, which he should endure in Purgatory for the mistrustfullnesse of his Wife, because she denyed her daughter so often desired by Brabantius a most excellent man, with which complaints she being affrighted, and pitying her Husband, assented to the request of the Knave: who notwithstanding, it sufficiently appeared, sought not so much after the daughter, as a dowry appointed her by her Father in his will. For six Moneths after, when as he had wasted the maids goods, the wife and Mother in Law being left, he fled away to Lugdunum. There he had understood, that a certain Merchant and very rich banker dyed. Who seeing he was accounted a most unjust man, for that he had scraped together all things by right and wrong in his life time, he cometh to his Son Cornutus, his onely heir, walking in a Porch behind the Church-yard, and intimates that he was sent thither that he might teach him what was needfull for him to do. But while he saith he was to think rather of his fathers Soul and good name than of his death, while they speak, a voice resembling his father, is unexpectedly heard: the which when Brabantius gave out of his belly, he feigned himself nevertheless to be in a wonderfull manner astonished. But his son was moved with this voice, into what condition his father had fallen by his injustice, and and with what torments of Purgatory, both for his own, and his fate he should be troubled, for that he had left him an heir of unjust goods, and which could by no means be pardoned, before by a small satisfaction made by his son, and one altar conferred on them who at that time chiefly wanted, and those were the Christians taken by the Turks. Therefore the man, who when he spake, he should believe, that this was sent by Godly men, to Constantinople to redeem them, and that he was sent therefore to him from God for that thing's sake. Cornutus, no ill man, although these words heard of gifts, he regarded not, yet because that of money seemed a hard word, he answered he would take deliberation, and bad Brabantius return to the same place the next day. In the mean time being sorrowfull, he a little doubted of the place in which he had heard the voice, that it was shady and dark, and fit for men lying in wait, and an Echo. Wherefore the day after, when he brought him into another open plain place, and litted with no brambles or shades, where nevertheless the same song was repeated while they spake, this also being added, that six thousand French Crowns being presently numbred to Brabantius, he should repay three Masses every day for his fathers salvation, otherwise there would be no redemption out of Hell. From whence his son being eyed in Conscience and Religion, although with grief, yet he committed so many to the faithfull dealing of Brabantius, all lawfull witness of the thing received and payed, being neglected. His father being freed from the fires and Vulcan's frowns, for the future was quiet, nor any more called upon his son. But wretched Cornutus, (Brabantius being let go) when as he was more merry then usuall, and his other Tables could not sufficiently admitt it, straightway as soon as he dealt with the cause to those enquiring it, he was presently laughed at by all, that for grief, after some dayes he dyed, and followed his father to enquire the truth of the thing from him. Pierius, Book 2. chap. 12. Of the Delusions of Devils.

A Neptarius son of Oicleus, a Soothsayer and Prophet, whom when Adrastus, King of the Greeks called Argives, would lead unto War against the Thebanes, he refused, and that he might not be compelled, hid himself, because he foresaw that he should there perish; yet by the deceit of his wife Eriphile, (whom he had corrupted with a Jewell) he was betrayed, and being against his will drawn to War in Beotia, in that place, which afterwards was called Harna: he was by the going of the earth, with his Chariot and Horses, swallowed up.
Pierius, in Thebes.

125.

125.

126. A Cleus Nasus, a Led, and that thou mayest laugh the more, a Shepherd, Publius Vergilius reigning, taking on himself the use of a Sooth-sayer's crooked staffe, becoming indeed suddenly an Augur, from the Swine-herd, through the report of the thing divulged, he was called forth to the King. Whom the King beholding, and perceiving scorned both his age and habit, tried in this manner: Whether (saith he) that which is now in my hand, may be done, or may not, I ask: Nasus when he had finished his divination, answered, It might be done. But the King thinking to mock him: But (saith he) I did meditate, that I might cut this wherewith with a razor. He with wonderful constancy replied: Thou mayst therefore: And the razor being snatched up, in the sight of the King standing amazed, and the people, he cut the wherewith. From thence divination was sacred to the Romans.
127. V V Hen L. Sylla was at Nola, that he might encounter with Marin the Elder, his mind being very much troubled, because he thought it a very hard thing; Polibonius the Sooth-sayer, who did do a divine thing, he being present, both his hands being stretched out to Sylla, said, That he should command him to be bound, and after that to be slain; else the victory of that battle would remain in his power, and he should get a happy success, because he had been bidden then by an Augur knowledge to foresee it. For the day after, Sylla entering into the City of Nepes, drove out Marin from thence, and fulfilled his mind, as he had wished. Fulgens, in book 8. chap. 11. out of Plutarch in Sylla.
128. S Spurius had foretold to C. Julius Caesar, That he should be ware of the 30 next dayes, as fatal, whole fall was the Ides of March. And when by chance both had come in the morning into the house of Calpurnius Domitius to the office: Caesar saith to Spurius: What knowest thou that the Ides of March are now come? And he: What knowest thou, that those are not yet past? The one had cut off his ear, as though the time mistrusted was finished; the other thought, that indeed the utmost part of it was not void of danger: Would God the divination had rather deceived the Sooth-sayer, than securing the Father of his Country. Herodotus, book 8. Or Suetonius.
129. A Grappus, the Nephew of Great Herod, of the sort of Arabians, being cast into bonds by Tiberius, Emperour, because he was desired to favour Caius, stood before the Pallace, among certain others a like bound, leaning for grief on a certain Tree, upon which sat an Owl and she, one of those that were bound, by Nasus a German, beholding the Bird, enquired of the Souldier, Who that Man in purple was? And having known that it was Grappus, a most noble man of the Jews, he asked the Souldier, that he might have leave to come nearer unto him: for he desired to know some things concerning his Country. Which being obtained by request, and an interpreter interpreter taken, he saith, O young man, so sudden and unexpected change of fortune indeed makes thee sad; neither wilt thou easily believe thy escape to be nigh at hand, divine providence so ordering thy affairs; But I call thy Country-gods to record, that I go not about to flatter thee, nor to feed thee with vain comfort. It cannot be, but that the course of things being changed, thou shalt escape forthwith out of these bonds, and come both unto the largest dignity and power, even to the envy of those unto whom thou hast seemed miserable. Thou art to have also a happy departure of life, children being left in the succeeding of wealth. But remember, when thou shalt again see this Bird, that the fifth day from it shall be destinous unto thee. These are the things which the heavenly ones shew to thee, by sending this Bird; Therefore I intreat thee, that as soon as thou shalt perceive that happiness, to be shown thee, do thy endeavour, that we also may be taken out of these adversities. He was a true Prophet. For six moneths after, Tiberius dyed. Caius succeeded in the Empire, who made Agrippa King. Josephus, book 18. chap. 8.

THe Spaniards call a people Adelutans, and Almagons, who from the flying of Birds, from the voyce, from the meeting of wild beasts, and of very many other things do divine, what good or evil thing is to happen; lastly, they have books most diligently written with all prognosticall divinations. Of these some are Dukes, and as it were Masters, others Earls and Schollars. There is also another cunning of these, to search out the passage, not onely of horses, and beasts, but also of men, by a cloathed on covered, by a naked, by a hard ground, by small stones, by great stones, as that the number of those who passed by, doth not at any time almost deceive them; who by a fit word may be called Searchers. These shewed forth a notable example of their Art in the Warr which Ferdinand waged against the Moor. For when as a hundred Moor's horsemen had avowed to their King, never to return, unless they had shewn forth some famous act against the Christians; and had privily come through wayes unpassible, and to fall upon the Christians garrison: The Searchers somewhat perceiving their way and number, made the Watch acquainted of their lying in wait; and they having followed the horsemen, they constrained them, being shut in on both sides to yield themselves in the channel of a brook, being tyed together in a long rank with one rope. Laurent. Vallas, book 1. of Histories.

130.

Alexander, Emperour, in the year of the Lord, 904, as Sigebert writeth, was idle, being given to riot and Magick. He having demanded of his Juglers, Whether he was to live long? he received an answer, If he had taken away from the brazen Boar in the Theatre, his teeth and privy members. By which saying they did signifie, that he was given to gluttony and lust, from the which, if he did not abstain, he would hasten his death; that which fell out. For after bathing, yielding himself to banquets and sports, a vein being broken, he dyed with an issue of blood. Zonaras & Ctesius.

131.

132.

Simeon, Duke of Bulgarians, had brought War on the Crobathians. It is told to Lactantius, a Roman Emperour; there was an Image placed in the top of Xenophus his vault, toward the West; that was turned into the shape of Simeon; the head of which Image, if it be cut off, the death of Simeon should not be far off. That being done, the same hour it was told the Emperour, he to have dyed of a pain of the stomach. Zonaras.

133.

IN the Gades there is an old stone in the brink of the Sea, most excellently graven upon the passage with Saracens work, downward broad and squared; upward narrowed, and of so great an height, as a Crow is wont to fly on high; upon which is the Image of a man lifted up of Copper, raised up on his feet, having his face toward the South, and a great Club holding in his right hand. Which club, as the Saracens deliver, shall fall out of his hand, in the year in which a King to be in Primer, shall be born, who in the last times shall subject all Spain unto Christian Lawes. And straightway, as soon as the Saracens shall see the Club fallen, they shall all flee from their treasures laid in the earth. The Saracens deliver, That Mahomet, while he was yet alive, built that Idol, and engaged a certain Legion of devils thither by the Art of Magick, the which holds it so strongly, that it could never be broken by any, neither doth it suffer Christians to come to it without danger, but onely Mahometans, and that Birds sitting on it suddenly killeth them. Turpin of Rhemes, with Esfordis fit, chap. 23.

134.

AMong the Burmians, Laplancers, Bathians, Finlanders, Northern people, there is this often kind of magickal divining. The Magician goeth into a closet, content with one companion and his wife; he inviteth a brazen Frog or Serpent with an hammer, upon an anvil, with certain strokes, and turns up and down hither and thither, with a muttering of verses; and straightway falling, is snatched into a trance; and layeth along for a short time as dead. In the mean time he is most diligently kept by his foresaid companion, lest a fly, goat, or any other living creature should touch him. Being returned to himself, he sheweth a ring on little knive, in token of his dispatched embassy, and declareth unto his hires, by certain signs what is done. Olant, book 5, chap. 17.

135.

JANUS, the Master of Theophilus the Emperour, was wont to foretell things to come, by the prophetic and signings of a bason. When sometime the Barbarians making use of three Leaders, did annoy the Roman power, the Emperour took him hope well. Between brazen Images, which were in sculpture of the Circle, a certain Image with three heads was reported to stand; Therefore Janus nes commanded three brazen hammers to be framed, and them to be delivered to men of strong hands, who at an appointed hour of the night, came with him unto that Image, and when he had commanded them, they should valiantly smite the heads, while they, as it were, with one stroke and force should cast down on the earth those heads. A great part of the night being now finished, Janner came with those men unto the Image, and repeating a magick verse, taketh away the strength that was in the Image, he bade the men with all their force to smite the heads of the Image. By two of their most strong strokes, two heads of the Image shook off; the third striking something more slackly, he bended indeed, yet plucked not away the head wholly from the body. After the same manner was it done with the Captains of that Nation; For an inbred sedition arising, two of the Captains were slain, the third received a wound, but not deadly. The Barbarians therefore being deprived of their strength, returned home. Cedron.

A Pollentius Tyennus, when he disputed in Ephesus, being almost separated from his soul, and with inbent eyes, as if he had been in the present thing, said often, Smite the sinner Stephen, smite him: And at last added, The Tyrant is dead; who was heard with the great admiration of all that were present; after ward they received that on the same day, and the very moment of hour, Domitian the Emperour was slain at Rome, by a man whose name was Stephen, as Apollonius had then declared. Falgesus, book 1. chap. 9. & Xipheline in Domitian.

136.

S Stephen the Hagio-Christopherite, (it is the name of an office) but for his wickedness otherwise called Antichristopherite, alied that he knew from the Devil, by Sethus a Magician, destruction to hang over the head of Andronicus Comnenus, by him whose name had its beginning. [3. S.] he appointed Isaac Angell, whom Andronicus despised as a low spirited man, to be laid hold of, and first to commit him to custody, and then by the Judgment of Andronicus the Tyrant, to kill him. Therefore coming into the Chamber of Isaac in the evening, he commanded Isaac to come down, and to follow him. But he delaying, he brought force. Isaac defending himself, kills Stephen, and going into the Temple with his sword drawn, he goeth up into that Seat where Maslayes, explaining their wicked deed, desire pardon from those that go in and out. But a multitude of the City in great number, presently flow together unto the Temple. The Hecle of Isaac helpeth him in the same. Damas, John, and his son Isaac. Moreover, others intreat the mingled multitude which had ran together into the Temple, and afterwards did run to it, that it would stay with them, and help according to its power, those that were placed in the greatest danger. Thus therefore Isaac fasted the whole night, that he might not think of the Kingdom, but might pray against destruction. But by earnest supplication he obtained this, that a certain man of that company company shut the doors of the Temple, and lightes being brought in, he instantly perswaded them by his example, that they would not depart home. When it was day, all the Inhabitants of the City of Constantinople were present, they all prayed God, that, Andronicus being driven away, Isaac might enjoy the Empire. Andronicus, who was then absent from the City, the murder of Stephen being known, did nothing else, but admonish the Citizens in a short writing, that they should cease to attempt new matters. Whereof this was the beginning, He that hath punishment, is taken away. But in the morning, many running together, Isaac is saluted Emperour of the Romans, when as one of the Church-wardens had put the Crown of Constantine the Great, which hanged over the Communion Table drawn down from the stairs, on his head, he was consecrated. Now when as the Emperours horses adorned with Golden trappings, were brought by the Crossing of the Gonians, one being by a Horse rider pulled away by force, is taken, and is brought unto Isaac. He, that horse being Mounted on, departing from the great Temple, Andronicus giving counsell to himself for flight, entrench the Pallace, and the saluted Emperour is confirmed. Nicetas.

137.

138.

William Earl of Holland, King of the Romans, Frisia being subdued, when at night a certain City he had found a Sepulcher adorned with wonderfull work; and did ask, Whose it was? The Citizens answer: None hitherto was buried there; but by some hidden destiny it is reserved for a certain King of the Romans. When therefore the Conquerour did ride with a few men, seeking a place to turn aside in, that he might bring back his army the more safely, he fell in the Ice. The Frisians who lay hid, broke out and before the King could be holpen, being partly cut, partly choked in his helmer, he perished. The Frisians their neighbors being called together, drive out the Hollanders; and slay them in the year of the Lord 1255. Thus by those of the same Town, according to the Prophecy, the King is laid in that Tomb, in the ninth year of his reign. But his son Florentius, the fifth of that name, after twenty seven years brought his Fathers bones out of Frisia into Zeland, Medieburg; and laid them in a Monastery of Nunnies of the Premonstratian Order, founded by his daughter Richarda, and increased by subsidies, in the year of Christ, 1282. Cuspinian.

139.

IN Northern Gothia two Tombs are seen, being huge Stones in the place of way-marks or Crosses, having the bodies of two brethren laid in them, unto whom it had been foretold by a soothsayer, in their first youth it should come to passe that they should dye by mutuall wounds given. To decline the destiny, they undertook a travell unto the farthest, and most contrary parts of the World. In their utmost old age, at length returning into their country, when as any one hoped his brother to have long since since died, not far from the Town Jonacum, they met one another unknown, and Saluation being on both sides given and received, they rested under the next pine-tree. By and by their Disputing, they also brake forth, first to quarrellings, then to mutuall wounds, and drawing out their Souls, and acknowledging themselves to be brethren, they dyed in mutuall embraces. Good in his first book of Northern Customs, ch. 37.

Sigthune King of Svealand, while he offered sacrifices to his gods, at Upsala the Mother-City, an answer being received by the sacrificers, he learned that by a fatal necessity, the highest damnation and death did hang over his head from the metall of Gold, and therefore he was chiefly to take heed of it, by Iron, or Steel; and other metalls he could never be forced or misled. Wherefore feeling he thought himself invincible, he attempted dangers of Wars. He had a most beautiful daughter, Græ. This, Sigthune King of the Danes required to be a Wife to his Son Gram. But her father had already betrothed her unto a most Noble Champion, the brother of Sumlar King of the Finlanders. Therefore Gram, thinking himself to be deluded by Sigthune, being cloathed about with skins of wild beasts, with great hazard he came to the Pallace of Sigthune, observing a time untill the maid going forth, he caught allude her unto a mutuall love, and being abused, and of her own accord willing, he might bring her away. Yet forthwith, for his compassion, through the great force of wit, brought on the mind of the Virgin was the love of his King. Therefore the maid nothing relenting, being brought into his Denmark, he loved with a great love, and bore her Guthorne, afterwards King of Denmark, and a daughter, wife of Sigthune King of Norway. Sigthune the Father of the maid, suddenly taken away, follows the Danes with war, to revenge the wrong by weapons. Gram, carrying a club in a Giant-like manner, the which Gold being powdered on it, he had made the weightier, slew Sigthune his father in law, too venterously approaching with his head, leaving by that deed, not an unprofitable instruction to the Kings of the Scandes, that they believe Gold is more to be feared than Iron. John Magnus, Book 2, Chapter 2.

140.

In the bed of Sampsonius, Gratiana, two Snakes were found, they afforded a sad token. For it was shewn by the Soothsayer, if he had sent away the male, his Wife must dye in a short time; but if the Female, himself. For which when Sampsonius had heard, loving Gratiana his Wife very much, he sent forth the Female. He kept his Wife, and himself a little while departed out of life. Pythæa, Book 3, of Wonders.

141.

At the

An History of strange Prophecies, 142.

Mercatorius being inflamed with the glory of the Syracusans, who had taken, and slain him; they being forced, first to flee from him, and then the walls of Syracuse, and covered with the greatest danger, he might either strike down the Army of the Carthaginians in Italy, or might himself be shut out of Italy; and by solemn sacrifices he searched out the pleasures of the gods. Which first sacrifice fell down before the little hearth, his liver was found without a vein, the host had a double head of the liver. Which thing being known, the host never answered, the curial pleased him, nor he could be any longer in mind of mangled, the second sacrifice was a bull, which he might not attempt any thing safely, then he sacrificed, during to go forth with a few, for he was now wine, like, being to take with a multitude of his countrymen, he brought a great spoil, and damage to the Carthaginians by death. Plutarch. in the life of Marcellus.

143.

And when the King of the Langobards, brother of Garibald, King of Lombardy, was about to marry his bride in the Church of field, he was found dead, a tree being struck from Heaven, which was the sign of the Virgin, the footmen being asked, if they received a message, they said, the Virgin to marry, but a milkmaid, who was a Widow, for Agilulph, the King confirmed the word of the Southsaying. For Agilulph, when he had fairly regard his wife, was taken away by poison of Thasim. The Langobards gave power to Thasim to his Wife, for her husband, and too much cruelly, Thasim should be lawful for her to have that Husband whom she desired, and they dreamed they would have him for their King. But she chose Agilulph. The marriage was solemnized at Verulam, where by the agreement of all, he was declared King of the Langobards or Lombards. Boetius. in the life of the King Diadoch.

144.

And when in the Chaldean War, a Priest of the great Mother Ides, came to Agilulph. This man brought word that the goddess had shewn him in his passage, that a victory and great glory of war was to come to the people of Rome. When there was an appointment of the Senate, and it had decreed a Temple to the goddess for Victories sake. A. Pompey Tribune of the common people, for to be going into the assembly, that he might have these things to the people, calling him by lot, and with silence drive him out of the place of their common place. Which thing most of all commended his saying. For as soon as the assembly being dismissed, Pompey returned to his house, he was taken with a Fever possessed him, that it was manifest to all, and much spread abroad, that he died within the seventh day. Plutarch. in the life of Agathus.

L. Sylla

L. Sylla being returned out of Asia against Cinna and Marius, he tells that in Silvina of Pontium, Servus a mad man to have spoken to him, who said he shewed to him from Bellona, that he should have the Palme or conquering Crown, and Victory of the War. The which unless he should perfect, the Capitoll was to be burnt: and that happened on the same day, which he had foretold, which was the day before the Nones of the sixth Moneth, which now we call July. Plutarch in Sylla.

145.

C Reopbilus in the bounds of the Ephesians, saith, those that built Ephesus, when they were greatly in doubt of the place at length they sent unto the Oracle, those which should ask, where the City was to be placed. But the Devil answered, Where a fish had evidently shewn, and a wild Boar had taught. But there is a report, that where the Fountain now called Hypelaeus, is, and the holy Haven, certain fishermen provided a dinner. Then a certain one of the Fishes leaped out together with the dead coals, and fell down into a bundle of Chaff; a green turf is presently inflamed, in which a wild boar by chance lay hid, who being much affrightened with fire, ran through a good part of a Mountain, even thither where Trachea is now called, and fell down, being wounded with a dart, where now the Temple of Pallas is erected. Then the Ephesians possessing the Island, when they had inhabited it twenty and one years, in the twenty and second they built Trachea, and afterward Corissum, and there raised up the Temple of Diana in the market-place, and of Pythium Apollo, in the haven. Athenaeus, Book 8. chap. 11.

146.

T Here was among the Locrians a wooden Dog, having such a History. For a lot was rendred unto a certain Locrian, that he should build a City, where a wooden Dog had fastned a biting on him. For which cause when he had sailed unto the other shore of the Sea, he trod upon a (kunosbaton) that is, a Dog, bush or bramble, a kind of thorn, from thence when he thought the Oracle to have an end, he built the Cities, which the Locrians call or esteem Ozole. Calim, Book 17. chap. 28. out of Athenaeus Book 2. chap. 33.

147.

L Eonides in his fourth book of the people of Attica, saith, when Thymates the younger brother, who was a bastard, had beheaded Apbidantes, King of the Athenians, he himself reigned at Athens. Whereby it was brought about, that Melanibius the Messian a banished man from his Country, received an Oracle, where he was to dwell, to whom it was answered, where it should be received for gifts from guests, setting feet and heads before him in a supper, the which afterwards happened in Eleusina. For when as they had a certain solemn feast according to their country manner, and had spent all the flesh, and the feet onely, and heads had remained, these very things they brought to Melanthus. Athenaeus, Book 3. chap. 9.

148.

149.

B Constantinople, before called Byzantium, was built by the Lacedaemonians. Pausanias being Captain in the most narrow Sea of Europe and Asia, unto whom it was said by the Oracle of Apollo Pythius, that they should place it against blind seats, that is the Megarians; who built Chalcedon in a barren soyl of the Countrey, a wealthy bank being let passe. Sirako, book 7. This City, Constantine the Great, who passed over the seat of the Empire, from the City of Rome into the East, to restrain the inroads of the Parthians, compassed with new walls, being warned from God, and adorned it with most high Towers, and stately buildings, that it might be thought rather the habitation of gods than of Emperours. This City, when the Emperour would name Nea, the common people from the builder called Constantinople. Caspiman.

150.

T Here is a report, that a Wonderfull meeting of a Sow that had piggs, made a divination to the Trojans of building a City, who, Aeneas being Captain, had come into Italy. They say she was great with young, and to have come to the Altars, being stricken with the hands of the sacrificers; thence, to have sit down on a little Tomb, four and twenty furlongs from the Sea, in a place surely hideous, and very difficult. Aeneas mindfull of the Oracle, followed the Sow aloof off, with a few that were by chance present, lest being nigh the trace, she should turn from the destinious way. But then contemplating the nature of the place, when as he perceived nothing in it which might invite him to the tillage of it, being doubtfull in his counsell, he was vexed, neither could he bring it into his mind, that such unfit seats were shewn him by destiny. And he was now late busied in advising of that one thing, whether he ought to be there, or should go as yet farther. When as from the next place a voice without an Authour, was given, which commanded the Trojans to remain there. Onely they should go forward to build, other things they should leave to the destinies. Others are Authours, that the shape of household gods was here in a dream set before the eyes of Aeneas, by which he was commanded to fortify the place. But whatever kind of Oracle that was, it is a certain report, that the Sow being the day after found with a numerous company of young, which she had brought forth in the night, to have confirmed the truth of the Oracle. The Tomb therefore was fenced with work done in haste, in which afterward Astyanax, who succeeded his Father Aeneas, built the City Alba, that is, white, so called from the colour of a Sow. Sabellicus, Book 7. Of the first Enead.

T Arquinius Superbus, or the proud King of the Romans, began to found the Temple of Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva, vowed by his grandfather in the Sabine Warr, in the high and rocky part of the Tarpeian hill, the roughness of the place being first corrected. But when he had determined to consecrate the floor, according to the custome, and the compass of this space had embraced certain Chappels of most ancient work; which because they were to be unhallowed, that the workmen, all fear of Religion being taken away, might demolish, they say, that then there were mockings of evil Demons, or devils, that other power had yielded up their divination to Jupiter, and the Goddesses, onely Terminus (some add also Juventa) could not be moved from their seat: And that thing being taken for a token of a stable and remaining Empire; A chappel to have afterwards remained unmoved in the middle part of the Temple. There is also a certain greater wonder offered to the workmen. A man's head was found with a fresh gore, by those who wrought in the lowest part. Tarquinius (for none thought not that to be wonderful) asketh counsel of household-prophets. These referring all the praise of that kind of learning unto the Hetruscians, brought rydings to the King, that he should tend into Hetruria to enquire. The Hetruscian Prophet answered, It would be, that the Tower of the Empire, and the head of affairs should be there, where that wonder had appeared; and now from thence, the place began, from Tarpeium, to be called the Capitol. Sabellicus, book 5. Ennead, 2.

151.

A Alexander the Great, moving his Camps from Troas, came to the Temple of Minerva. There is a Priest, Alexander by name, when he had seen before the house of Ariobarzan, who was President of Phrygia, an Image struck down on the ground, and other strange sights of no small moment, he came to the King, and in a great horse-exercise, confirmed, That he should be a Conqueror; especially if he did joyn his companies in battel about Phrygia. He added thereto also, That he should kill the Captain of his enemies with his own hands. But all those things were shewn to him by the gods themselves, and chiefly from Minerva, which was to be an help to him for the performing things prosperously. Alexander received the foretelling of this Priest with a joyfull mind; and presently honoured Minerva with most large sacrifice, and dedicated his buckler unto her, and by and by brought out another that was most firm for him; With which he being armed, entered the first fight, where he carried away a famous victory. Diodore, book 17.

152.

153.

When the Grecians had gathered Ships together in Aulis, a Haven of Enhes, to go to Troy, and an Altar being built, they sacrificed under a Plain Tree; a Serpent of a wonderful big-galle creeping under the Altar, went up into the top of the Plain-Tree, and inclining a Sparrow's nest hanging on an outmost bough, he devoured eight young ones, and the mother her self taken by the wing, and presently himself stiffned into a stone. Calchas, a Prophet, interpreted the divination. The Greeks should besiege Troy nine years in vain, at length in the tenth year to take and overthrow it, the glory of such a deed to remain for ever. Ulysses in Homer.
Iliad. 2. repeats the History.

154.

Alexander the Great, assaunking Gaza; a Crow flying over, a certain turf or lump of earth being let down from on high, smote the shoulder of Alexander, and then sitting on a Tower besmeared with slime, she being infolded by the rough matter, was taken by the wings. Plutarch saith, she sat in an Engine, and there being ensnared in a knot of ropes, to have stuck fast. Aristander the diviner beholding that thing, said it would be, that the City would be in a short time taken, but it is a danger, lest some wound the King would receive that day. And both indeed happened. Sabellicus, book 4. Ennead. 4.

155.

Caelim Pontius, when a Pye had sat on his head, declaring the law, and the Soothsayers had answered, the Bird being let go, there would be a victory of the enemies; but she being killed, of the Commonwealth; yet he who had oppressed it, should dye;
he presently killed that bird. From which it fell out, that Caelim himself, with fourty others, was slain. Volaterran. book 14. chap. 2.
Antibros. pul.

156.

Alexander the Great, an Expedition into Asia being undertaken, after he moved to the War, both other wonders of the gods were shewn, and also a sign of Orpheus at the hill Libe-thum, there was a Cyprus Tree, which issued forth about that season with a plentiful sweat. All being affrighted with that wondrous sign, Aristander bade him be of good courage, he should carry on things never to be blotted out, and famous, which should afford much sweat and pains to Poets and Musicians, singing them forth. Plutarch, in Alexander. The same Alexander besieged Tyre now the seventh moneth, and while he refresheth almost the whole Army from their former labours, but brings a few to the walls, that his enemies might not have respite, Aristander the diviner, sacrifices being slain, when he lookt into the intrails, he confidently affirmed by the Crow, That that City was without doubt to be vanquished. Which receiving his saying with a mock and laughter, because it was the last day; the King seeing him troubled

bled, and favouring alwayes his Prophecies, forbade hereafter, that to be numbred the thirtieth day, but the twenty eighth of the month; and a sign of the Trumpet being given, he set upon the wall more sharply, than from the beginning he had begun to do. When the City was not sloathfully assaulted, neither those that were in the Camps were a rest, but ran together to bring help, the Tyrians were broken, and Alexander took the City that day. Plutarch in Alexander.

The Syracusans being besieged by Nicias, went up to the Temple of Hercules, because they had long time performed solemn rites to Hercules, and they offered sacrifice. The Priests being Soothsayers, declared unto the Syracusans joyfull intrails and victory, if they did not begin the conflict, but beat back their force. For Hercules in defending himself being first forced, overcame all. And so going forward, they made a very great and sharp Sea-battel in the very Harbour, and overcame the Athenians. Plutarch in Nicias.

157.

L. Sylla, when he was sent with an Army to the Sociall War, at Laverna, a tempest lighted into a great bosome of earth, and out of it a great fire brake, and lifted up a light flame to Heaven. But the fortune-tellers told, That an excellent man, and excellling in beauty, and famous, was to let loose the City unto present storms, when he had taken the highest command. Sylla saith, this man to be himself: For a shining hair of a golden colour is peculiar to his face. But he would not blush if he take virtue or valour to himself, so great and famous deeds being done. Plutarch in Sylla. In the same War, when he sacrificed before the Pretor's house, he suddenly beheld a Snake sliding down from one part of the Altar, which being seen, he forthwith by the encouragement of Posthumus a Soothsayer, drew forth his Army for the Voyage, and took the most strong Camps of the Samnites. Which Victory laid the steps and foundation of his future and most large power. Valer. Max. book 1. chap. 6.

158.

P. Scipio Africanus, when he had found that Army which laid Carthage equall with the ground corrupted, he amended it. But they report, the hills of his sword springing with much blood, to have foreshewn the end of the War: the which, when it was oftentimes wiped off, a little after it was more bloody: For that monstrous thing, said the Soothsayers, doth signifie a great slaughter of the enemies. Suidas.

159.

They report, That sometime the head of a ramm with one only horn was brought unto Perisls out of the field, and Lampo the Prophet, as soon as he saw the strong horn, and firm, sprung out of the middle of his forehead, so have said, The power of two factions sections that were in the City, of Thucydides and Pericles, were to be brought unto one, with whom this wonder had happened. But Anaxagoras, when he had dissected the bone of the head, to have shewn, that the brain filled not up its seat, but in manner of an egg, the sharp part to have rolled out of the whole shell, in that place, from whence the root of the horn drew its beginning. And indeed they who were present, had, at the present, Anaxagoras in admiration: a short time after, Lampo, when as the wealth or ayds of Thucydides being broken, the whole Common-wealth had fallen back into the hand of Pericles. But both of them might conjecture rightly, as well the Naturalist, as the Prophet. The one, who well followed after the cause; the other, the issue; for it belonged unto his office to consider whence it had proceeded, and how it had sprung forth; to this man, to foresheew, what there was at the time of its nativity, and what it should betoken. Plutarch in Pericles.

160.

161.

BEfore the time that Alexander the Great set upon the Persians, they say Darius (when he first began to reign) commanded the Persian (heath or scabberds for their darts to be made after that fashion which the Greeks at that time used, and then many of the Chaldean Prophets foretelling, That the Empire of the Persians should be translated to them, of whom he was King, he imitated the fashion of their sheaths for darts. It happened accordingly; for Darius being overcome and taken by Alexander, the Empire of the Persians was translated to the Greeks. Sabellicus, lib. 4. Ennead. 4.

162.

THE Buckler of Maximinus the Father being set on fire by the Sun, and his Spear being struck by a Thunder-bolt, was cloven through the Iron and all, from the very top to the bottom thereof; from which the Soothsayers gathered, That there would arise one of that Nation, Emperours of the same name, who would continue but for a short time: Which came to pass; for the Father and Son, called by the name of Maximinus, in a short space after ruled the Empire together. Sabellicus, lib. 1. cap. 4.

163.

Dion prepared a Navy of Ships in Zazinth against Dionysius; Miltas, a Theban Prophet, observing a Martinel or Martin, which flying amongst the ships, lighted upon the very top of the stern of the ship wherein Dion was; thereby was caused to fear, (as he privately told his friends) that the magnificent things which he was about to perform when they had flourished a small time, would decay and come to nothing. Plutarch, in Dion.

164.

Dionysius Syracusanus was put away by the Tyrant Dion, at which time an Eagle snatched from one of his guard a Lance, where-with sublimely mounting, at length she let it down into the deep; whereupon the Prophet said, That the Eagle was the minister of Jove,

fore he concluded, That the Prince of the gods would work the subversion of the Tyrant. Plutarch, in Dion & Theopomp.

VHen Cræsus King of the Lydians, fought against Cyrus King of the Persians with equal success, and staying at Sardis; upon a suddain all the Suburbs were filled with Snakes, which the horses while they were going to graze, devoured; they whom Telmiffes consulted about what happened, said, That there would come a forreign Army which would overcome the Natives; for, say they, a Snake is a child of the earth, and a Native; but a horse is an enemy, and stranger. In the mean time, Cræsus was taken of Cyrus, and stript of his Kingdom. Herodotus, lib. 1, 164.

WHen Dion was about to raise Warr from the Iland Zazimb, against the Tyrant Dionysius, at the solemn vows and sacrifices, the Moone was eclipsed; moreover, ecliptick circuits, and the shadow which methinks the Moon, was no strange thing to Dio, who thought the Earth the object of the Sun: but because he desired to elevate the minds of his astonished Souldiers, he called for Miltas the Theban Prophet, who when they were all called together, made a learned Oration, wherein he advised them to be of good courage, and assure themselves of great success; for that god had declared himself defective by the eclipse, by reason of the presence of their illustrious Leader; and that there was nothing more illustrious then Dionysius the Tyrant, by the glorious splendour of whom, they should overcome the Sacilians as soon as they should there arrive. Theopompo Plutarch, in Dio.

165.

THe Sacrifices offered by Dionysius the younger to the gods, portended great prodigies, at that time when he most tyrannically put away Dion, the Sea was so high by a tide, that it overflowed the Castle; yet within four and twenty hours the water was so sweet, that it was potable, and that many who tasted thereof, declared the same! Which thing Plinius remembers, in his book 2. cap. 100. Swine brought forth piggs that had all their parts, but that they wanted ears; the Prophets expounded that, to portend defection and rebellion, and that the Citizens should be no longer obedient to the Tyrant; and that the sweetness of the water signified a vicissitude to the Syracussians, by alteration of their sad and heavy times, into better and more comfortable. Theopompus and Plutar. in Dion.

166.

ACrut in Bruto writeth, Tarquinius Superbus had a dream to this purpose, That a Shepherd came to him and brought him two Rams, and that he immolated one of them, and that he saw a furvivour, who rushing upon him with crooked horns, he was with a suddain impetuous force cast prostrate upon the ground upon his back, and casting his eyes towards Heaven, he perceived the Sun to passe through a new orbe and unaccustomed way; which when he had related to Interpreters, they advised the King to take heed, lest he whom he accounted rude, a beast and monster, being armed with wisdom, should drive him out of his Kingdom; and that what was shewed him by the Sun, portended a change to the people: which happened accordingly; for Brutus, whose brother the King had oppressed, and whose wit he but sported and mocked at, drove away the King, and Kingly Title; and the Roman State was so altered, that instead of one perpetual King, it begun to have yearly two Magistrates. Petrarcha de Somniis, ex Ciceronis, lib. 1. de Natura Deorum, Actii Bruto.

167.

168.

Hippocrates, the most valiant Duke of Athens, being alone, chanced to see at Olympia, a sight portending strange things; for when he had immolated the host, the pots (as they were ordered) were full of flesh and water, and without any fire put to them, grew so hot, that the water boyled over: which portent, Chilon the Lacedemonian, who by chance came thither, beholding, first persuaded him, that he should not bring his Wife thither, being fruitfull. Secondly, if he had a Wife, that he should put her away; and if she had born him ever a son, he should resign him: but Hippocrates not observing the counsel of Chilon, but promoting his son Pisistratus, he invaded the Tyrant at Athens. Heredot. l. 1. Sabel. l. 6. Ennead. 2.

169.

At Thebes in Bœtia, in the Temple of the Law-giving Ceres the time when by the conduct of Epimundus, the people of Leutrica overcame the Spartans, the Spiders had woven white webs about the Valleys, the Macedonians now by the conduct of Alexander the Great, invading the Coasts, there presently appeared sights portending ruine and destruction to the City, all things were filled with black workmanship. Pausanias in Bœotia. This sign was three moneths before Alexander came to Thebes, about that time, the Statues which stood in the Common Hall, were seen to send out of the huge gravings abundance of sweat, besides these things, it was testified to the Magistrates, That the Pond or standing Lake which was at Onchestus, sent forth a noyse like to the Lowing of Cattle, and that there was in Dirces a certain horrid bloody shape, which swimm'd upon the water, and there were not wanting some of Delphos, who said, That the top of the house which the Thebans built, appeared to the Phocensian people to be full of blood; the Prophets said, That the Web did portend the gods migration from the City; the shape of the Heavenly bow, perturbation, and various sorts of molestations; the sweat sent from the Statues, extreme losses; and moreover, the blood which was seen to appear in many places, shewed, that bloody slaughter would ensue at Thebes. Diodor. lib. 17.

AT Saguntum, before it had suffered the misery which Hannibal afterwards inflicted upon it; amongst many and daily monstrous fights which were seen, A child which was almost born out of his Mothers belly, returned back to the Mothers womb again: Which Prodigie, the prophets said, did foreshew a destructive Warr, imminent and fatal destruction; so that it was utterly overthrown by slaughter. Alex. lib. 2. cap. 31.

170.

A*rchilaus*, Tetrarch of Judea and Idumea, was sent for, being accused of Tyranny by Cesar, to Rome; who after hearing the accusations of his enemies, and his own defence, banished him to Vienna in France, and taking all his substance from him before he exiled him, in the tenth year of his Government; before he was sent for to Rome, he told to his friends this Dream; He saw ten ripe ears of corn full of wheat taken away by Oxen; and considering that his dream was worthy to be taken notice of, he consulted with interpreters of dreams concerning it; who disagreeing concerning the meaning thereof, Simon, one of the Essai, to wit, one that abstained from flesh, wine, and women, as all the Jews of that Order did, (making an apologie) said, That this vision did portend change to Archilaus, and that to the worse; for that Oxen did signifie misery, because this kind of creature is under continual labours; and furthermore, it foreshewed mutation of things, because the ground being turn'd by the labour, retains neither the same place nor form; but those ten ears of corn, shew the number of ten years, for that they go about by annual turnings, and that immediately there would ensue an end of the domination or rule of Archilaus; so did this Jew interpret the dream. Five dayes after this vision, Cesar sends a procurator to Judea to summon Archilaus before him, Joseph. l. 17. c. ult.

171.

AT the Palatine house of Mediolanum, seven dayes before the Lievtenant Governour Barnabas was taken by his Cosen Galeacius, there was such vehement lightning, that the hangings of his Inner Chamber were burnt with a Thunder-bolt; and his Ensign being a marble Viper, was shattered in pieces. A Prophet then, a domestick, whose surname was Medicina, in the nones of May, observed the unhappy conjunction of three Stars, (he had formerly predicted much) and then he endeavoured to retain him whom he saw running precipitately towards his destruction, which was thereby threatned; but such was the hidden power of his fate, that he went on his way, being wretchedly infatuated. Julius in Barnaba.

172.

Zoon the Emperour hearing of the discomfiture of his Army, lees into a little Castle sited upon an hill, which the people called Constantinople; which considering immediately after his coming thither, he with sighing said to his company; Poor man;

173.

Is it the sport of the gods, who have thus deluded me? for the Prophets did confidently affirm, That it behoved me to be at Constantinople in the moneth of July; whereupon I thought I should have been in the City, but (poor wretch as I am) I am onely in this little Hill, which beareth the like appellation.

174.

A Certain man called Harold, who bragged that he had a familiar spirit; told Frederick the second that he should die in the Florentine field; Therefore, in that his last journey from Thufcia to Apulia, he used all possible care to avoid it; but falling into a grievous Feaver, he was forc't to lye at the Castle of Apulia, six miles distant from Luceria (which they call Florentinum) as soon as he remembered the prediction of Harolus, and the name of Florentinum, he perceived that the end of his life was at hand. Collenuius, l. 4. Historia regni Neapolitani.

175.

Certain Writers affirm Ezelinus a Roman, and Albericus brethren, bloody and fierce men to have been the sons of Adebeida, a Lady of the Noble blood of the Tuscans, of so high a wit and discretion, that (beyond belief) as well by observing the Heavens and Stars as Magicall Art, she foresaw things to come. Many Predictions which accordingly fell out, were demonstrated to her Husband and Children, and especially this one; That on the day of her death, she pronounced three Verses in manner of an Oracle in which she chaunted forth the might, and progresse, and the very place of the death of her sonnes, and it appeared by the events nothing of the Prophecy but came to passe. Now I shall say nothing of Albericus, whereas Ezelinus was admonished to take heed of Cassanum, being ignorant thereof by reason of the obscurenesse of the place, he ever most studiously avoided the Castle Cassanum, bordering upon the Paduans and Hetruscans, supposing it the farall place; at length after he attained the age of seventy years, whilst with all his might he warred against Adelsolanum, his terrible and insolent spirit making him hated by almost all the Longobards, he was by them circumvented, for having passed the bridge, and finding himself in extreame streights, and inquiring the name of the place, as soon as he heard Cassanum named, and remembering the confusion threatened by it, clapping his spurs to his Horse, he ran headlong into the River before him, murmuring to himself, O inevitable fate, O my Mothers presages, O how was Cassanum hid from me! And before he could well swim over the River, he was fallen upon by an innumerable Army, who had possessed themselves of the brink and bankides of the River. Petrarcha.

176.

M Achabeus King of the Scots, fearing Magduffus, being admonished by Soothlayers, was told by a woman a Fortune-teller, that he should not fall by the hands of any man that was born of a woman, and that he could not be overcome before the wood Bernen were carried to the Castle Donusinna, which was a great way distant.

stant. Therefore he falsely thought himself invincible, and free from all stratagems and deceits of his enemies; having cut down the wood Burnen, and carried every stick to the Castle, wherewith he compassed the Castle the day before he was overcome: to be short, he was slain by Magdusius, who was not born, but cut out of his Mothers belly. Cardanus de rerum Varietate, Lib. 16. cap. 93.

177.

A Antonius of Leva animated Charls the first, Emperour, to war upon France, and undertook to be Generall of the Army, although he had been informed by the Oracles, that he should be afflicted with cruell sickness, dye in France, and rest at the Church of St. Dionysius, which he interpreted should come to passe by his extending his Victory to Paris it self; but it fell out far otherwise. For the Cesarian Army which he led, was wasted with a Flox, and he, spent by watchings and griefs, died near the City Narbo in France, and was buried at Saint Dionysius. Sabellici supplementum, 20.

178.

A Milearus, Duke of the Carthaginians, besieging the Syracusians against Agathocles, was told by a Sooth-sayer (who gathered this conjecture by the observation of the entrails of beasts) that the next night after he should sup with the Syracusians, who when he conceived he should have obtained Victory over them, by a sally which they suddenly made out of the City, took him Prisoner, and carried him to sup with the Syracusians; contrary to his will, where by cruell torments he died.

179.

The Vesivii consulting an Oracle there, where Cesar was born were answered long before from the top of the wall, which by its height shreathed heaven, that one who should be born in that Town, should be a great commander in the World, in confidence: whereof the Citizens did immediately, and long afterwards, make war against the Romans; at last by what afterwards they saw, it appeared that by what was shewed, the might of Augustus Cesar was portended. Suetonius.

180.

H Adrianus Cornetanus Cardinal, not drawn thereto by malice but an ambitious desire of reigning, looked after the death of Leo the tenth. For he conceived an assured hope of obtaining the Papacy by the Oracle of a fortune-telling woman, who telling to him, asking fortune of her, many things past of his publick and private fortune, most exactly true; she also constantly affirmed that one Hadrian, an old man of obscure birth, a great and studious Scholler, who by degrees obtained sacred honours by his own merits, and not by the favour of great men, as soon as Leo departed this life, would succeed him in the Papacy: all these descriptions he conceived did congruously and apparently belong to him. For he was born at a poor Village called Cornetas, in the coasts of Tus- can descend of a poor family almost fordid, onely by the benefit of his learning, attaining the dignity of sacred orders. The Oracle of the old Woman proved true, but Hadrianus the Cornetanian was deceived, for he did not succeed Leo; but one Hadrian, an old man, a Batavian, son to a poor labourer, being illustrious by his learning, after Leo, obtained the prodigious felicity of the Papacy. Jov. in Leonis Vita, lib. 4.

181.

WHEN Alexander the Great, determined to fight against the chief City of the Oxodracian Indians, a certain man called Demophon, being one of those that used to make ostentation of predictions, came to the King, and told him, that he had observed by Augury, that there was great danger portended to him by reason of a wound which he should receive in fighting against the Indians, and therefore he admonished Alexander to divert his intencion from invading that City: who rebuked him for going about to apall the courage of valiant men, and providing all things necessary for his March, he leading a great Army, arrived at the City, and intending to storm it, he placed his Artillery against it, and making a breach in the wall, broke into the City, killed many, and pursued those that fled to the very Castle, and whilst the Army of the Macedonians were seeking to scale the Walls, He, without any cunctation, snatching a ladder, and artificially bearing his buckler over his head, he falls scaling the wall, and used so much celerity therein, that before the drowsy Barbarians could get to the wall to defend it, he got to the top thereof; the enemies durst not approach to grapple with him, but put him hard to it by Darts and Arrows which they threw and shot at him: The Macedonians with two ladders which they had reared to the Wall, did oft endeavour to scale the wall, and relieve Alexander, but were still repulsed by the enemy. Wherefore he being destitute of any help, alone, and loaded with defensive and offensive Arms, leaped into the very Castle, and most valiantly defended himself against the Indians, who violently ran about him, but he seeing a tree near the Wall, stepped unto it, and leaning his back to it, made it so much his defence, that they could not come about him; and now laying about him at his enemies by dint of sword, though he shewed great courage by his most valiant deeds, which, like a Royall King, to the astonishment of his enemies, he demonstrated, insomuch that he seemed to desire nothing but a glorious death, receiving many shots and blows upon his helmer and buckler, yet at length an Arrow which was shot at him, lighted a little under his pap or breast, and there sticking, he was constrained by violence of his pain to fall upon his knees: which an Indian who was engaged by a wound which he had received from him soon perceiving, furiously marched to him, and fell upon him, but was by one blow with his sword suddenly dispatched. The King then catching hold of a bough of the Tree within his reach, helped himself off his knees, and began to provoke his enemies to fight, in which which interim Peusestus, one of the Squires of the Kings body, scaling the Wall, was the first that came to the defence of his Prince, and after him many more, who put the Barbarians to flight, and delivered Alexander from further danger. Diodorus, lib. 17.

A Certain servant, a Syrian, born in Apenrea, whose name was Eunus, who delighted in Magicall enchantments, and circulatory legerdemains, served amongst the Eunensians in Sicilia. This fellow would take upon him that he could by instinct and revelation from the Gods, who appeared to him in his sleep, tell things to come; shortly after, he bragged that he could foretell future events, not only for that the gods appeared to him asleep, but also waking, and that they plainly told him of things to come: when as by many of his Prophecies, he was found a notorious liar, yet in the mean time some things came to passe according to his predictions, which was a reason that no man questioned him for his false Prophecies, but what he chanced truly to foretell, was so observed and applauded, that the people shortly had a high esteem of him: at last he devised to blow a flame of fire out of his mouth with a certain fanatick fury, he Prophesied like as it had been one of the Priests of Apollo, to which purpose he had a nut, or something of like nature bored through, in which he put fire, and combustible matter to nourish it, and putting it into his mouth, and blowing, sometimes sent forth sparks, and sometimes flames, this fellow was used before any defection, to brag that the Syrian goddesse did appear to him in his sleep, and tell him that he should obtain regall dignity; and he did not tell this only to the ordinary sort of people, but likewise he daily related the same to Antigonus the Eunensian his own Master: his relation raising much laughter, and Antigonus taking great delight in his prodigious lies, had him as a jester to wait upon him at his feasts, and would enquire of him concerning state-affairs, and what would become of all the company, and when he answered them all with great confidence, and promised that it would come to passe, that he should shew great lenity and clemency to his Lords, he rayled great laughter amongst them. The common people raising a tumult, came to this Eunus, and asked him if the gods favoured their enterprise: he approving the thing, perswaded them to go on therein, and presently four hundred of his fellow servants, taking him for their Captain, brake into the City, and made such a horrible slaughter, that they spared not very sucking Infants, and this was the beginning of the servile Warre which made such horrible destruction in Sicily, that Rutilius at length with much ado, made an end of it. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 34.

182.

221

VVhen at the Thermopile long Mountains passing through Grace to the Egean Sea, three hundred Lacedemonians were to fight against Xerxes, Megistias Ararnas, a Prophet of the race 183.

race of Milpodes, told that it was apparent, That death was imminent over all their heads; though Lionides offered openly to dismiss him, that he should not undergo such hazard of his life, yet he would not depart, but also caused his onely son to go along with him, and be a Souldier; all the rest of his fellow-Souldiers which were discharged of their service, went their wayes; the Thebians and Theban Souldiers went on, and continuing with the Lacedemonians, they all perish together. Herodotus, lib. 7.

184.

Whereas it was often given out as an Edict, That whosoever either privately or publickly did predict or foretell the death of any man, should suffer death; at length Domitian the Emperour commanded Asclepius to be burnt, and Larginus Proclus to be hang'd, for that they foretold the day of his death: the one of these Fortune-tellers was sent by the Governour of the Province of Germany, to Rome, where he constantly affirmed what he had predicted concerning Domitian, and named a certain day, not long too, wherein the verity or vanity of his Art might be judged; therefore it pleased the Emperour to defer the execution of his sentence till that day; upon which, his prediction came to passe: wherefore by the favour of the noble Romans, he was freed. P. Herodim Suetonio.

185.

Gillandus saith, That Perusinus was the greatest Magitian of all Italy, who singing Mass upon a certain day, and coming to that part of it at which he was to turn to the people and say, Orate pro me, &c. he said, Pray for the Castles of the Church, who are now expiring their lives; and at the same instant, the Souldiers of a Castle, twenty five miles distant from Perusinus where he said Mass, were slain. The like story we read in Philip Comineus, of a certain Italian Archbishop of Vienna, who in the presence of King Lewis the 11th, celebrating Mass upon the day of the Epiphanie, at the Church of St. Martin at Turon, when he offered the Pax to the King to kiss, pronounced these words; Peace to thee, O King, thy enemy is dead. And it appeared, that Charles Duke of Burgundie dyed the same hour at Nanceum in Lotharinga. Comineus telleth many shings of this Archbishop, which seem to be the certain effects of meet Witchcraft.

of

VV

Of the Dreams, Visions, Revelations, and other such kind of Legerdemanes and mockeries of Evil Spirits.

Agamemnon, leader of the Greeks against Troy, when he had taken Briseides from Achilles, Thetis interceding for her son, that he would subject the Gracians to the Trojans, till they really perceived, and found by wofull revenge, what losse, trouble and vexation they had caused to Achilles, by their injurious dealing with him: Jupiter sends a dream to Agamemnon, wherein he commands him to draw out his Army, now is the time αὐτὴν ἡμέραν ἐκπορεύεσθαι τὸν δῶρον for now he should take Troy. Jove cannot lye, (that he full well knew) yet he well saw that he could not take the City that day: Jupiter plaid or sported with him by the abstruse meaning of the word; for the adverb now, signifies in the Greek, not onely present, but instant; and hath that latitude, that it signifies past, and not much past; and to come, and not far off; Jupiter therefore meant by now, the tenth year, which was then present, which was not long from the destruction of Troy. But Agamemnon interpreting, or construing his Dream to mean the present day, he drew out his Army immediately, and received a great overthrow. Iliados. 8.

Cyrus King of the Persians, leading an Army against the Masagetians, being at rest, dreamed, that he saw Darius the eldest son of Hystaspes, having two wings, with the one whereof he overshadowed Asia; and with the other, Europe. This Darius being twenty years of Age, at this time was left by his father at Arismenum in Persia; Cyrus awakened out of his dream, and suspended with this nocturnal vision; and casting many wayes what should be the meaning thereof; at last said, That thereby was revealed to him from the gods, that Hystaspes and his son Darius did lye in wait to surprise him and his Kingdom, he used therefore his utmost endeavours to return into his own Countrey, the Masagetians being conquered, and leaves his son in his place; but that Vision foretold, That Cyrus should be shortly overthrown, and that ere long Darius should obtain his Kingdom: which came to passe, after a short reign of Cambyses, which came betwixt this and Darius his Conquest. Sabellicus, lib. 6. Ennead. 2.

3. Socrates foresaw in his dreams, that his Scholler Plato would be an excellent Orator and Philosopher; for the day before (he being brought to him by his father) Socrates in his dream saw a white Swan fly into his bosome, which by his muscally striking of his wings, filled the Ayr; which Dream, as soon as Plato was brought to him, he declared. Pausanias in Atticis.

4. Hippocrates in his Epistle to Philopomenes, relates his Dream thus: That meditating solicitously of Democritus, (to whom being called to cure the Abderitani, he saith, that health would meet him in the morning). I saw, quoth he, Esculapius, and as we were both before and even at the ports of the Abderitani, Esculapius appeared not, as his pictures speak him, mild and gentle; but with squalid habit, and an horrid aspect; and there followed him Dragons, a fierce kind of creeping creatures, of huge length, hissing in deserts and lawnes; he had in his company likewise, men that followed him with boxes of medicaments handsomely closed up: immediately he reacheth forth his hand to salute me, which, God knowes, I most joyfully imbraced; I desired to wait upon him, and to serve him in his administering Physick; but he answered, for present 'twas not needful; for this goddess of mortals and immortals will conduct thee, being a stranger: Whereupon turning my self, I beheld a goodly fair Lady neatly and gloriously adorned, about whose eyes there appeared such a circle of shining splendour, that exceeded the glorious brightnesse of Stars. He thereupon departed, but the Lady taking me kindly by the hand, leads me on a grave pace through the City; and when we approached near a house, whercin I thought I should have been entertained, she departed like a ghost, saying, To morrow I shall find you with Democritus. To whom as she was going away, I said, Dear Lady who are you? and how may I call you? Truth, sayes she, but she that thou seest coming towards thee, (and presently another Lady not uncomely appeared to me, of a more bold aspect, and more fierce) whose name she told me was Opinion, and that she lived with the Abderitani. When I therefore awaked from my Dream, I conceived the interpretation of it to be, That Democritus needs not a Physitian, God departing from administering of Physick, when there is no matter or sicknesse which requires it; but that Truth, which alwayes dwelleth with Democritus, saith he, is in health; and that Opinion which saith he is sick, remaineth amongst the mad Abderitani.

5. Alexander was descended from Hercules by Carinus, and from Ascan on his Mothers side by Neoptolemus, as it was verily thought. It is reported, that when Phillip King of Macedon first courted Olympiades, taken with her beauty, (by the help of her brother Arybba, whom Diodore in his sixteenth book calleth Arymba) whose friendship he obtained, he stole her away from her Parents, rents, and married her, and that the night before they enjoyed nuptial rights, in a dream he thought he saw Jove touch his belly, being descended from Heaven in thunder; whereupon there was a huge fire which arose, and presently dispersed it self into flames all about. The same Philip, a short time after his marriage, dreamed, That he sealed his Wives belly, and that the sculpture of the seal, as it seemed to him, was the Image of a Lyon; which vision he declaring to some that took upon them the interpretation of dreams, they advised him to set a strict Watch or Guard upon his Wife; but Telomessus said, She would bring a Lyon-like child, for that no vain thing is to be sealed; therefore the dream signified, that she would have a child of perfect animosity and courage. Plutarchus, in Alexandro.

Sophocles did often dream, that Hercules speaking to him by name, called him thief, because he had stolon a golden vessel out of his Temple. And that being detected and brought before the State, he confessed himself guilty of the theft whereof Hercules accused him; wherefore from that time ever after, the Temple was called by the name of Hercules his Temple. Fulgosus, lib. 1. cap. 5.

Annæus Seneca, a Senator of Rome, being commanded by Claudius, the Emperour, to undertake the Tutorship of Nero, as yet a child hopefull, by a towardsly genius; the night after he received him, (as 'tis reported) he dreamed, that he had to his Scholler Caligula, whose famous cruelty had appeared to the World: Not long after the conditions and manners of Nero changing, or rather being detected, appearing, he proved himself to have a soul void of humanity; insomuch, that it was admired, because he was so like Caligula, how it could otherwise come to pass, but by the transmigration of Caligula, his soul out of Hell, into Nero. Petrarcha ex Suetonio & Dio.

Eudemus a Cyprian, a familiar friend of Socrates, travelling into Macedonia, cometh to Phere, a rich and famous City of Thessaly, but oppressed and brought somewhat low, by the inhumane tyranny of one Alexander; he was there taken with such heavy sickness, that Physicians despaired of his health; who thus afflicted, dreams, that he saw a gallant young man, who coming to him, assured him of three things to come, That he, though now extremely sick, should shortly recover his health; That the Tyrant of that City should dye within a few dayes; And that he within five years should go to his own Country. And the two first did manifestly come to passe accordingly; for he beyond all hopes recovered his health; the Tyrant was slain by his Wives Brothers; the third was somewhat more obscure, for about the end of the fifth year, as he was going from Sicily, where he then lived, to Cyprus, he was taken out of this World by Wars at Syracusa; we find, that Interpreters of Dreams excuse the not coming of Eudemus home according to the dream, by saying, That by death his soul was delivered from the bonds of his body, and returned to her Countrey. Periarchus

9.

Aspasia, the daughter of Hermotimus, after her Mother Phoeniss dyed in labour, together with her child, being educated in penury, and want of a Parent, yet modestly and handsomely she often dreamed, that she saw one, who told her, that her fortune should be such, that she should be married to a gallant and honest Gentleman; it chanced to the Maid, that a swelling rose upon her very chin, most ugly to behold, which was a cause of much grief both to her father and her: whereupon her father brought her to a Physitian, who undertook to cure her, upon condition that he should give him three Staters, (which is worth seven shillings of our English coyn) for his pains; When the father said, 'Twas more then he had; the Physitian dismissed the young Maid uncured, who thereupon was most grievously tormented, so that she ate nothing; that night, an opportune sleep seizing upon her, she had a Vision, wherein she heard these words: Be of good courage, and trouble not your self with Physitians, but take a Rose of Venus, and beating it together into a salve, apply it to your swelling. Which when she awaked, she accordingly performed, and her swelling was clean taken away, and Aspasia so far transcended all the Ladies of her time, in glorious beauty, vertuous life, and incomparable carriage, that Cyrus King of the Persians, enamoured with her excellencies, first married her, and after his death Astaxerxes took her to Wife. You may read the Story elegantly set forth by Helianus de varia historia, lib. 12. a principio.

10.

IN the time of Plinius, the Mother of a certain Souldier who served in the Praetory, dreamed, that she ought to lend to her son the root of a wild Rose-Tree, or Sweet-brier, which she had seen and observed in a Grove the day before by reason of its beauty, to drink in milk. This happened in Lusitania, being the nearest part of Spain. And it came to passe, that this Souldier having been bitten with a mad-dog, whereby he grew so ill, that he began to fear the waters, and shew many symptoms of his infirmity; he received a Letter from his Mother, wherein she desired him to make use of the Medicine which was shewed her in his Vision; which he observing, and performing, became presently free from the misery he was in; and not onely he, but any that afterwards upon like occasion, made use of that medicine. Plinius, lib. 25. cap. 2.

11.

Æsculapius of Athens prescribed by Oracle to Plutarch an Athenian, and Domninus a Syrian, who bruised by I know not what chance, did spit blood, that they should be filled with Swines-flesh; but Plutarch, though by the Law of his Nation he was not forbidden Swines-flesh, and therefore might have made use thereof according to the prescription, utterly refused it, and awakened from sleep, stretching forth his arms in his bed, and beholding the Statue or Image of Esculapim (for he lay in the porch or entry of the Temple) he said, Why didst thou prescribe this cure to an Hebrew or Jewish Lord? for neither hadst thou bid him to be filled with Swines flesh. Which words when this man had spoken, Esculapim (a most sweet sound being uttered out of the Image) prescribed him another way of curing the disease. But Dominus, having followed the dream otherwise than the instructions of the Syrians, do lead unto, not the example of Plutarch, he both then and ever afterwards ate that flesh; and it is reported, if at any time it had ceased one day, the disease to have waxed worse, untill they were fullfilled, Suidas.

of

12.

A Certain Persian, Epixyes by name; a Noble Lord of the upper Phrygia, laid wait for Themistocles, going down unto the Sea by reason of businesse pertaining to Greece, after that he fled to Xerxes, Pisidians being long since provided, who in the Town, which they call [Leontcephalon] (that word signifieth the heads of Lyons) that they might kill him, walking in the night. To whom they say, the Mother Idea being set before him by a dream, to have said; O Themistocles, avoid thou the head of Lyons, least thou run into the Lyon. For this thing therefore I requite from thee the hand-maid Mnesiptolema. From whence Themistocles being overwhelmed with fears, the goddesse, being worshipped, declined the Kings way, and being gone past that place, he now sat down with others in the night. But when one of the beasts which carried his Tent, had slidden into the River, the servants of Themistocles opened the arras hangings, being made wet, to dry them. In the mean time the Pisidians run to them with their Swords. But when they could not sufficiently see through those things that were dried, unto the Moon; They thought they were the Tents of Themistocles, and that they should find him resting within; when as now going nearer privily, they carried away the Arries, the servants being intente, flew upon them, and quickly took them. So he having rid himself of the danger, in reverence of the goddesse, which had been presented before him, he built the Temple of Dyndimena at Magnesia, of whom he made his daughter Mnesiptolema a Nun. Plutarch, in Themistocles.

13.

L Lucullus going to Hellepont, built or fitted a Navy for the Mithridatich war. Being broughed to sea, he turned aside in the Idoll Temple of Venus. Being asleep in the night, he seemed to see the Goddesse standing by him, who said, Why sleepest thou, courageous Lion heart? When thou'st Dogfish is next present there, He arising, his friends being called unto him, put forth the dream, it being as yet night. Some of Troy were also present, who shewed him, that there were five of the King's Gallies with Oars at the Haven of the Achians, thirteen which bent their course into Lamnos. Therefore he presently lets loose, and obtained these; he killed their Lievetenant or chief Commander. Isidore, &c. Plutarch in Lucullus.

14. M Arconius, a Physician of Augustus Caesar (when two Armies of the Romans had stood in the fields of Philippi, here the Army of Octavius and Anthony, there of Brutus and Cassius, and the next day they were to joyn battell) received a Dream from Minnerva, that he should warn Octavius labouring with a grievous disease, least by reason of health being against, he should not be present in the next battell. The which when Caesar had heard, he commanded him to be brought in a horse-litter into the battell, in the which while (for the getting glory) he had watched and warded above his strength, he was freed of his disease, and was freed from the Souldiers of Brutus, thinking of his murder, and robbing his Camps, and striking shorow the empty Horse-Litter with Arrows and Darts. Cicero, Book 3. Of Divining, in Augustus.

15. S Seleucus was the son of Antiochus, who was one of Alexanders Captains. He had Laodice for Wife; who, that night in which she conceived Seleucus, it seemed to her, being at rest, that she lay together with Apollo, from whom she had received a ring engraven with the shape of an Anchor, and that he was found in the bed, and to be kept with diligence. Laodice gave him unto Seleucus (being well taught concerning his birth) going with Alexander into Asia. It is added, that Seleucus, and those begotten by him, had their thigh marked with a naturall Anchor.

16. When the Romans being once shut up in difficult places by the Sannites, were greatly pressed upon; P. Decius, then Tribune of the Souldiers, he saw himself in his sleep, to lye between most thick wedges, dying with much glory. By which dream, the most valiant man, most thirsty after glory, yet not so much affrighted, as encouraged unto the desire of his promised end, began to decline no kind of danger: and being admonished by friends, that he should fight the more warily, he opened unto them his dream and purpose. Then notwithstanding being (beyond thought) unhurt, he brought the army out safe from the jaws of their enemies. But after three years passed between, the late truth was brought to sleep. For in the Latin War, himself being Confull, sacrificed himself for the Common-wealth: and being brought into the middle of the enemies Armies, he dyed with such glory, that he stirred up his son unto the like desire of an hereditary death. These almost after this manner, are both written in the Annals of Rome, and related by Tully.

C. Gracchus saw the shape of his brother Tiberius (who was killed in the sedition of the field Law) in his sleep, saying. He might delay as much as he would, yet he must perish with the same death, by which he had died. Which also happened. For when after most destructive Lawes published, he had possessed the Mount of Alventine with an armed multitude, by Lucius Opimius he was slain. Cicero in Book 1. Of Divination. Plutarch, in the life of the Gracchians.

17.

C. Alpurnia the Wife of Julius Caesar, saw in her rest, that night which was the last he lived on the Earth, that he was slain with many wounds, laying in her bosome: and being exceedingly affrighted through the cruelty of the dream, ceased not to intreat him, that the next day he would abstain from the Court. But he not moved with a Womans dream, thought to do that, he earnestly desired to go to the Senate, in which the hands of Parricides were brought on him; where, by Brutus and Cassius he was slain. Vas. Julius, Book 1, chap. 3.

18.

L. Cornelius Sylla, not onely foresaw his death, but also wrote some what of it. For in the twenty second Commentary of deeds done by him, two dayes before he deceased, he set to the last hand; and saith, the Chaldeans foretold him, That where he had famously lived, he was to depart in the flower of happiness. He telleth also, That his son, who had dyed a little before Metella, was seen in a dream to stand by him in an unusual garment, and to have prayed his father, that he would lay aside cares, and would go forward with him to his Mother Metella, there with her to live in rest. Plutarch. in Sylla.

19.

A Beholder of Playes, who standing in the place of beholding, had mused in his sleep, that he was slain by a sword-player who seemed to be present; by and by he told the sisters by, that he had seen the Dream; so being killed by him with an Eel-spear, he taught by experience, the vain dream to be true, by a miserable issue. Alexander, Book 9. chap. 26.

20.

C. Reat Sportias, the day before he departed from Orthona against Braccum, who besieged the City Aquila, in the year 1423, dreamed about the morning, That being overwhelmed with a deep heap of waters, was conversant in the greatest danger of his life, and to have beheld a man in a Gyant-like shape very like to D. Christopher, of whom even with a great and often repeated voyce, he besought help in vain. But he being nothing warned by his dream, departing by Orthona, in the crosse passage of the small River Arvens, of which at this day hath his name from the Town Piscaria, while he brought help unto a Lad, his Armour-bearer being in jeopardy, his right hand being stretched forth, pitching in the 21.

the muddy Foord, his horse, although famous, failed in his hinder legs, and so his armour weighing him down, he was drowned, Jovin, in his Life.

22.

Malpaga, an Archer, was not an unacceptable servant unto Galeatius Sfortias, Duke of Mediolum, among his household-servants. This man, the day before that Galeatius was killed, he saw in the night, at the time of rest, as if himself had been present at the thing, him being thrust thorow with wounds made, to be put together with his father in the same Coffin. That which afterwards he waking beheld to be done, Galeatius being dead, while a proper coffin was made for him. Which sight, the same Malpaga, before the Duke was killed, being through fear astonished, had told unto his Earls. Fulgosus, B. 1. ch. 5. Of Examples.

23.

Mark Anthony Faurell, Earl of Guastella, when he warred in the Kingdom of Neapolis, in that War which Ferdinand the Elder, King of Arragon, waged with Renais King of Andegavia, in the standing Camps, which he had in the Country of the Bruttians; arising in the morning from his bed, he told those his Souldiers who had stood about him, that he saw in his sleep, that he was drowned in the waite: and therefore decreed to abstain from swimming, to which he had accustomed himself. But when at noon-day after sleep, being cloathed with a Souldiers warlike garment naked from above, he had come to walk to the neighbouring Lake, and saw some of his Souldiers swimming, being unmindfull of his night-dream; and perchance the destinies so drawing him, letting himself down with some others into the Lake to swim, according to the dream that he had seen, he was drowned, when as none of his Souldiers could bring him help. Fulgosus, book 1. chap. 5.

24.

Horace Perusine, servant of the Feasts or Junkers unto Alexander of Medices, Duke of the Florentines, a little before that he was killed by Lawrence of Medices, was vexed with a Fever, from a vapour, as is meet to be believed, of black choler, he had a sight thrice in the night, in the which he beheld the Prince to be stabbed by Lawrence: Which images of things, drave the sick-man, that he told it to Paschall the Prince's Physician, to be related to the Prince. But Paschall, carefully doing duty, found the Prince in that mind, that he said it was a fable of a dreaming sick man; admiring, why the whole house had conspired together for hatred of Lawrence: The Supply of Sabellicus, book 22. out of Jovin.

25.

Baptista of Cardanum, studying at Papia, on a certain night, as soon as he arose, tryed to kindle a sparkle of fire. In the mean time he heareth this voyce, Go, my son, go to Rome. And he saw a great brightnesse, like a bundel of burning chaff. He being affrighted, his fire-light being laid aside, lay hid under the bed, bed, untill his chamber-fellows, returned out of the University. When they returned, thinking him to be sick, they knock at the door, he openeth it. Straight way, to them enquiring the cause, he answereth, He thought his Mother to be dead, and told what he had seen and heard, and also wept. They turned the thing into a jest, partly laughing at him, partly comforting him. The day following, when as yet he had not received a message concerning his Mothers sickness, he was terrified of her death, that she breathed out her soul in that very hour, wherein he had perceived these things. The Town of Cardanum is absent from Rapin about two miles. Cardane, Of the variety of things, book 15. theop. Sapient. tells this of his Kinsman.

Ulysses after his return into his Countrey, being affrighted with such contrary dreams, called together most skillfull Interpreters, telling, that a certain Image was seen by him, of a very laudable beauty, between the countenance of a man and a god, suddenly to be sent forth out of the same place. The which, to him desiring to embrace with the greatest desire, and stretching forth his hand, it was answered unto him in a man's voice, That such a conjoyning was wicked, because it was of the same blood and birth: for thereby the one would destroy the others work. And then to him more eagerly, asking it, and desiring to learn perfectly the causes of that thing, a certain sign arising from a male, came between his sight, and that second power on jurisdiction of his cast upon him, to have disjoyned both. Which thing, all who were present, pronounced to be destructive with one month, warning him to take heed of the layings in wait of his son. So, Telemachus by his fathers will, is banished into the fields which were in Cephallenia. He himself going apart into hidden and separated places, endeavoured to avoid the force of the Dreams. At the same time, Telegonus, whom being sprung from Ulysses, Circe had brought up at the Island Aia, when he was of ripe years, going to search out his father, came to Ithaca, bearing in his hands a certain spear, whose top was armed with the bone of a Sea-tortle, to wit, a token of honour of that Island, in which he had been brought up. Being instructed where his father Ulysses lived, by the keepers of the ground, being at his first passage more mistrusted, is forbidden, when as he more eagerly resisteth, he is on the contrary repulsed, he begins to cry out, It was an unworthy act, that he should be forbidden from the embracement of his father. So Telegonus being thought to come to bring force on the King, he is more sharply resisted, for it was not certainly known to any, that Ulysses had also another son. But the young man when he saw himself the more exceedingly, and by force, to be repulsed, being raised up through grief, killeth, or being greatly wounded, weakeneth many of the keepers. Which things after they were known to Ulysses, he thinking the young man to have been sent by Telemachus, going forth of doors, casts the Lance which he had wont to carry for his own defence sence, against Telegonus. After that, the young man escaped this stroke, he sends a notable dart against his present father. When Ulysses fell down with the stroke, he gave thanks for his fortune, and confessed it was very well done by him, because being slain by the force of a strange man, he had freed Telemachus, a most dear son to him, from the wickedness of parricide. And holding back the residue, he asketh the young man, who he was, and from what place risen, who durst kill Ulysses the son of Laertes, famous for counsel and war? Telegonus then knowing it was his father, tearing his head with both his hands, uttered a most lamentable weeping, being exceedingly tormented for the death brought by him on his father. Dido, in book 6.

27. Periphon, a Lyrick Poet, his age being now finished, seemed to see Persephone to stand by him in his sleep, and to complain, That she onely of all the gods was not adorned with his verses. But when he had come unto her, he should also make an hymn on her. Indeed a little after, and even before the tenth day from that dream, he finished the duties of life. There was at Thebes a certain old woman, joyned to Pindare by kin, and very much exercised in singing forth many of his songs. Pindare shewing himself to her at the time of rest, sung a song on Persephone. She being presently awakened, wrote down all things which she had heard Pindare singing, through a vision in her sleep. Truly in that song, amongst other firmness of the hell-goddes, is Chrysenus, to wit, from the golden rains; which thing, it is sufficiently manifest, to have served for the snatching away of Proserpina. Pausanias, in his Boeoticks.

28. Unto Phayll King of the Phocians, after the Temple of Delfos spoyled, he scarce as yet having come to his command, such a thow by a dream, was set before him. Among the things offered to Apollo, there was a very old image of brass, of a man, whose flesh being consumed, his bones alone were left. They of Delfos said, it was dedicated by Hippocrates the Physician. Phayll seemed to see himself made like to this. And a few dayes after, pining away with leanness, he fulfilled the issue of the dream. Pausanias, in his Photicks.

29. A little before the destruction of Messene, in the twenty first year of the War, Aristodemus, King of the Messeniens, seemed at the time of rest, to see, when as now arms being taken up, he was to go forth to battle, the intrails of sacrifices being placed on a table, his daughter (whom six years before being sacrificed for the safety of his Country, he had slain with his own hands) standing by him in a black or mourning garment, and her breast being naked, shewing her wounds. and then the intrails being removed from the table, the weapons being withdrawn, her self to be endowed with that golden crown and white garments. He therefore thought this dream to betoken death unto him, because the Messeniens nians lift up the Nobles being crowned, and covered with a white garment. And without delay, when by the devoting of his daughter, he saw he could nothing profit his Country, as his daughter's Tomb he brought death on himself. Plutarch, in Clements.

Alexander King of Macedonia, first knew by a dream, that the right hand of Cassander would prove mortal to him; before that in the end he felt it. For he thought himself to be killed by him, when as he had never seen him. As such, sometimes coming between, after that he had come into view, the image of his night fear being dissolved, as soon as he knew it to be the son of Antipater, a Greek verse being added, which raiseth up the truth of the dreams, he beat back the suspicion of poisoning now prepared against his head; whereby it is reported he was slain with the hand of Cassander. Kalens Maximus, book 1, chap. 7. Sallustius, book 6. Eneid. 4.

302

Alexander taking a sleep, thought himself in his sleep to be covered with the cloak of his Concubine. The truth whereof straightway followed. For Crinas, when he saw Alexander very much to prevail in favour and authority, endeavoured to take him out of the midst of them. Therefore he sent Tisamen (or as others name him, Solometes) and Dagons, that they might kill him. He when he was with his Legion, being killed in her bosom, and was cast away unhurt, was covered with the garment of his Concubine. Justin, book 5. Plutarch, in Crinas, in his Life.

31.

That was an effectual Image of tests, which brake the confidence of King Crisp, first with the greatest fence, and then also with grief. For of his two sons, he thought that Alyce more excellent both in great nimbleness, and endowments of body, and ordained for the succession of the Empire, was taken away from him by the sword. Therefore whatsoever did belong to avoid the bitterness of a denounced slaughter, the father's care in no part ceased to turn away. The young man was wont to be sent to wage War, he was kept at home. He had an Armory filled with plenty of all kinds of weapons; that also he commanded to be removed. His Earls used to be girded with the sword; they were forbidden to come near. Yet necessity made way for mourning. For when a wild Boar of huge bigness wasted the till'd plots of the Bedens, Thym, with often destruction of the Conway people; and help was humbly besought of the King against the unaccommodated beast, the son wrestled by force from his father, that he might be sent to slay him, indeed so much the easier, because the cruelty not of the tooth, but of the sword, was laid up in fear. But while all were diligently bent on a sharp endeavour of killing the swine, a stubborn chance of a hovering force, turned the lance sent from Alyce, that he might smite the wild beast, out of the right way into him:

Hh

him:

32.

A History of Dreams, Visions, him, and would have his right hand especially aspersed with blood, and with murder, upon whom the defence of the law was committed by the father. Plutarch, Ciceronius, book 1. chap. 7. of Herodotus, book 1.

33. The daughter of a Tyrant, of the Romans, she seemed to have some kind of craft, but rather to be on high in the air; who thought that he was by Julius, but deceived by the sun. She being delighted with this vision, warn'd her father, that he should not let Julius the Governor of Cambray at Julius. But he obeying the dream, was slain by Gracius, Herodotus, book 1.

34. Ulysses the son of Ajax, was presented in his dream, the image of a tall man pronouncing these verses,

Tall, thin, and of a terrible countenance,

35. Ulysses the son of Ajax, was presented in his dream, the image of a tall man pronouncing these verses, A

Ulysses the son of Ajax, was presented in his dream, the image of a tall man pronouncing these verses,

Ulysses the son of Ajax, was presented in his dream, the image of a tall man pronouncing these verses,

In the morning he would utter these words to the Interpreters of dreams. But finding that the Vision being despised, he neglected it, and went away into the Trojan field, where, by Alexander, and Ulysses, he was killed. Herodotus, book 5.

35. Sidon of Athens, when as he moved an expedition against the Spartans, his navy being now ready, he had such a dream. An eagle flew round to bark at him, and to utter thereupon a voice like to a man's voice, and a dog's barking, in these words;

Be gone, thou art to be a slave

To me, and to my whole ship.

Sidon was a divining man, and familiar friend of the gods, and used to be foretold him, using this argument. The dog is an enemy to him whom he barks at; but to a friendly commander, or a friend, but when he dyeth. Moreover, the eagle was, as with the Athenians, an enemy, whose Armies consisted of Athenians and Spartans. The end proved the dream to have been true; for not much time after Sidon dyed of a disease in the city of Athens, Plutarch, in his life.

Sidon was a divining man, and familiar friend of the gods, and used to be foretold him, using this argument. The dog is an enemy to him whom he barks at; but to a friendly commander, or a friend, but when he dyeth. Moreover, the eagle was, as with the Athenians, an enemy, whose Armies consisted of Athenians and Spartans. The end proved the dream to have been true; for not much time after Sidon dyed of a disease in the city of Athens, Plutarch, in his life.

When as a certain one had seemed to repeat a verse of Homer's unto Socrates; 36.

Ἡμεῖς μὲν τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τελευτήσομεν.

Thou shalt indeed on the third day

To Phthia come, full-fraught with clods of clay.

He said to Æschines, I shall dye on the third day. Phthia was the Country of Achilles. And his friends endeavoured to perswade Socrates, that he should flee into Theſſaly, because there he had good friends. But he drew φθν, from [φθν,] that is, to kill or corrupt. And the third day alter, Hemlock being drunk in prison, he perished. Laertius, in his Life.

Atterius Rufus, a Roman Knight, when a Sword-play was set forth by the Syracusans, he saw himself in the time of sleep, to be thrust thorow by the hand of Retiarius. And the next day he told it in the place of beholding unto the sitters by. Afterwards it fell out, that in the next place from the Knight, Retiarius was brought in by the Sword-player. Whose face, when he had seen the same man said, he thought he should be slain by that Retiarius, and forthwith he would depart thence. They, his fear being shaken off, by their speech, brought the cause of destruction to the miserable man. For the Sword-player being compelled into that place, and cast down while he endeavours to strike him lying along, kills Atterius being thrust thorow with his Sword. Valerius Maximus, in the first Book, chap. 7. 37.

Julius Caesar, not much before he died, in his sleep sometimes he seemed to himself to fly above the Clouds, sometimes to joyn his right hand to Jupiter. Moreover in the same night, when he lay in his bed, all the dores of his Chamber, and likewise the Windows being set open, he was affrighted both with a noise and light, and the Moon shining bright, he marketh Calphurnia being fast asleep, to utter dark words, and undistinct sighings. She imagined that she lamented him whom she held thrust thorow, in her bosome. Others deny that sight to have been set before her. But when as a Pinnacle had been (by the decree of the Senate) adjoynd unto Caesar's house, as Livy is Author, as it were for an Ornament, and enlarging it, Calphurnia having imagined (at the time of rest that to have slidden down) she seemed to her self therefore to mourn and weep. But when light had approached, she asked Caesar, if by any means it might be brought to passe, that he might not go forth, but might adjourn the Senate unto another time. But if he did esteeme her dreams but as a lock of Wool, yet he should ask Counsell of the Soothlayers, and Sacrifices, concerning things hanging over his head; Whence there was some suspicion and fear set be- 38.

fore him also, as it seemeth : For he took notice of no superstition before the woman was grieved or vexed for that thing which she then saw. But as soon as the Soothsayers told him, satisfaction could not be made, many sacrifices being now slain, he determined, Anthony being sent, to dismiss the Senate. In the mean time Decius Brutus, surnamed Albino, whom Cesar, for the trust which he had to him, had written amongst his second heirs ; seeing he was a companion of the conspiracy of the other ; Brutus and Cassius fearing lest if Cesar should passe away that day, the matter would have been told abroad, he mocked the Soothsayers, and reproved Cesar ; and being taken by the hand, led him forth. And so that day, in the Court, being thrust thorow, with many wounds he was wretchedly slain. Plutarch.

39. Cesar* being slain, the people diligently sought after the conspirators being hidden. Helius Cinna the Poet, one of Cesar's friends, had the night before, a fearfull dream. It seemed to him that he was invited by Cesar to supper ; but when he refused, he was led by the hand against his will, and struggling. This man, hearing the body of Cesar to be burnt in the Market-place, although he had his Vision mistrusted, and was also held with a Feaver, came for the honours sake of him into the Market-place. As soon as he was seen one of the common people told his name to another which asked him, heto another : straightway it spread through all, that this man was one of Cesar's smiters. For there was among the Conspiratours, another of his surname, Cornelius Cinna : whom because they thought this was he, by and by, a violent force being made, they in the very market-place, tore him in pieces. Plutarch in Cesar & Brutus.

40. Nero* (Provinces a litle after falling off from him) was affrighted with evident signes of Dreams, and significations of things to come, and all things both old and new, he never wonting to dream before. At length his mother being killed, he saw at the time of rest, a Ship, the stern by violence wrested from him governing it, and to be drawn by Octavia his wife into the most narrow dark places. And by and by to be filled up with a multitude of winged Anns, sometimes to fetch a circuit from the Images of Nations dedicated to the Theatre or view of Pompey, and to be driven away in their progresse : an ambling Nag, in which he very greatly delighted, the latter part of his body transfigured into the form of an Ape, and onely his head being whole, to utter forth shrill neighings. Suetonius.

41. CAlba* the Emperour, a litle before his death, had set apart out of his Treasure, a Jewell set forth with Pearls and pretious stones, to beautify his Tusculane-Fortuna. That on a sudden as more worthy of a famoufer place, he dedicated unto Venus of or in the Capitoll. But the next night he saw Fortune complain in his his sleep, of the Jewell being taken away : and in good earnest to threaten, that she would snatch away himself, and also those things which he had given. The Emperour being affrighted in the dream, most early in the morning, those being sent before, who should make ready the Divine thing, ran into Tusculanum : and he found nothing besides warm members on the Altar, and an old man clad in black beside it, holding Frankincense in a Glasse dish, and unmixt Wine in an earthen cup. Suetonius.

Domitian dreamed that Minerva departed out of the holy place, denying that she could defend him further, because she had been disarmed by Jupiter. The same man dreamed, that a Countrey-man came to him with a Sword, and Minerva, who was placed in his Chamber, to have cast away her weapons, and the same to go down out of a Chariot, which was drawn with black Horses, into a great gaping of the Earth. He was presently slain by his layers in wait. Xiphiline, in his life.

42.

Anthony Caracalla, Emperour, a little before that he was thrust thorow by Martial, Tribune of the Souldiers, and prepared a setting forward out of Antioch, his father Severus stood by him with a Sword in his sleep; and saith, Even as thou hast slain thy brother Geta, so will I kill thee. Anthony therefore awaking out of sleep, never doubted the end of his cruelty, and life to be at hand when as before also the Diviners had foretold the like things. Dion. Nyssus.

43.

Dionysius of Syracusa, as yet containing himself within a private habit, a certain woman Hymerea, of no obscure stock; while she took rest, in her opinion climbed up to Heaven, and there the seats of all the gods being viewed, she takes notice of a mighty man, of a yellow colour, a freckled face, bound with Iron chains, covered underneath with the Throne and feet of Jupiter. And the young man being asked what Captain, the favour of beholding heaven had used, who he was? She heard that he was a cursed destiny unto Sicily and Italy, and that being loosed from bonds he was to be a destruction unto many Cities. The which dream she the day after by speech divulged. And then, after that fortune, an enemy to the liberty of the Syracusans, and hatefull to the lives of guiltlesse ones, cast Dionysius, being freed from his heavenly custody, as it were a certain Thunderbolt, into idleness and rest, as soon as Hymerea beheld him entering the walls among a dissolute rout, for the honouring and beholding of him, she called out, this is he whom she had seen in her sleep. That thing being known, made the Tyrant carefull to take the woman out of the way. Val. book 2. chap. 7.

44.

When

45.

When Cicero followed Julius Caesar into the Capitoll, and told him, the last night Jupiter was seen by him, who with a Golden chain had let down a little boy of a wonderfull towardnesse from Heaven, unto the Gate of the Capitoll, unto whom he had afterwards given a whip in his hand: Octavius being then beheld whom Caesar had brought into the Capitoll for paying a vows sake, he knew that to be him whom he had seen in his sleep: His triumphs and Son, being truly a scourge to the too much proud Nobility of Rome, made Cicero his dream certain. Fulgosus, book 1. chap. 5. & Xiphilin in Augustus.

46.

Q. Catulus, the Capitoll being dedicated, at the time of his rest, he saw Jupiter to have chosen one out of many children clothed in Purple robes, to whom he had given the Roman ensigns to be carried in his hand, and the night following, when sleeping, he would drive away that very child out of Jupiters bosome, Jupiter said, that he should not remove the child, because he kept him for the safeguard of the Roman Commonwealth. On the morning following, he by chance lighting on Octavius, by his shape and garment knew, that that was he, whom he had seen at the time of sleep. Fulgosus, book 1. chap. 5. & Xiphilin.

47.

Sleep shewed unto Vespasian the father, his own Royall office; and of his sons. For when he was as yet a private man in Achaia with Nero, he saw it told him (at his rest) by an unknown person, that his happinesse shall begin when a tooth should be taken away from Nero. Therefore being awakened, he on whom he first happened, was a Physitian, who shewed him a tooth that he had pulled out of Nero. Therefore not much after the death of Nero followed, likewise of Galba, and after them the discords of Otho and Vitellus, yielded the first beginnings and strength to Vespasian for rule. Fulgosus, book 1. chap. 5. Moreover Nero himself saw (at rest) Jupiters Chariot to be sent into the house of Vespasian: which words when they wanted interpreting, Josephus the Jew said they did betoken the Roman Empire to Vespasian. Xiphiline in Vespasian.

48.

Julian being chosen Emperour by the Souldiers in France against his will, said to some of his more dear friends; On that night which had gone before the day of his being declared Emperour, a certain likenesse (was seen by him) of some Genius or Paynim, which said these words unto him in a chiding manner: Ere while (O Julian) I attend at the porch of thy house, hiddenly much delighting to increase thy dignity, but as often as being repulsed, I have departed: and (the opinion of many agreeing) neither now indeed am I received, I will go cast down and sorrowfull; yet that I will keep in remembrance in my heart, that I will dwell no longer with thee. Cuspinian.

Nephus dreamed and supplicat Philosopher In his sleep, to be in danger, because he had not offered [Incense] that is, the sacrifice of an uncorrupted heart. A wise and true way, but the Philosopher being nothing disturbed at this sight, answered: What seest thou, Nephus? Dost thou come hither as a boy with my complaints, because money being mutually taken, I have not filled the City with a favour? But according to the bignesse of a familiar thing, I have sacrificed unto thee some very small fishes. At these words Nephus smiling, he seemed, his right hand being placed to him, to have laid unto him: For thy great favour, I will bestow on the City of the Megarians, plenty of [Apollon] or very small fishes. The which also they deliver to have happened.

49.

42

50.

51.

52.

53.

54.

Unto Nippis the son of Ishtar, while being a banished man he passionately looks after King by Authority, at Martha's a great shape of his mother, with whom he seemed to copulate at the time of death, was brought before him. For which thing the interpreters answered him, that Authority Royal was largely signified unto him, and he being put in mind thereof by his dream, and full of hopes, not long after enjoyed the dominion of Assyria.

The Mother of Dionysius of Syracusa, when she had conceived a child in her womb, she seemed to bring forth a Sun; and an Interpreter of wonders, being consulted with, she knew with accurate issue, that he was to be the most famous and most mighty of the Grecian blood. Valerius book 1. chap. 7. Herodotus, book 1.
The birth of Cyrus his grandfather by the Mother side, the birth of Cyrus having respect unto the Empire of all upper Asia, two dreams of his being fore-tellers of it, endeavoured in vain to shake off Mandanes his daughter, because he had seen in his sleep, her urine to have overflowed all the Nations of Asia, not to a most excellent man of the Assyrians, lest the glory of the Kingdom should be possessed over into that family; but by assigning her unto Cambyses, a man of a mean fortune of the Persians, and by commanding her to be put out, because the crime being quietly likewise had thought through the offspring of Mandanes, the vine spring forth would have increased so far, until it would overshadow all parts of his dominion: but truly he was disappointed, by endeavouring through man's counsels, to hinder the happiness of his Nephew, appointed unto him by the judgment of the heaven. Herodotus, book 1. chap. 7. Herodotus, book 1.

Lest the dream of Ishtar should be a sign of his death, he was not able to resist the desire of his heart, and so he came to the end of his life, and was buried in the city of his birth, and his tomb is still to be seen. Herodotus, book 1. chap. 7.

53.

They report, That Cyrus, King of the Assyrians, dreamed, the eldest of Princes of Babylonia Hyphar had him, with two wings to overshadow, with the one, Asia; with the other, Europe. This dream of his son Hyphar, Darius the eldest son of Hyphar having obtained the Kingdoms, subdued Europe and Asia. Herodotus, lib. 1. c. 101.

54.

Mithridates, the Sonne of Antigonus, was a companion to Demetrius, son of Antigonus, and his equal, and had Antigonus in reverence, a man with neither in deed, nor in the opinion of others. An unlucky suspition happened to Antigonus, concerning him, by reason of a vain dream. For (at his rest) it had seemed to him, to have set a wide field with branches of gold; from thence first grew golden corn. A little after, he, when he had remained thither, found nothing but stubble; and when he was very greatly grieved, he heard the voyce of a certain one, who said, Mithridates, the golden corn being mowed down, went away into the Euxine Sea. He being much troubled, opened that sight to his son, being first brought to a bath of silence; and that thing also, that he determined by any means to kill Mithridates. Demetrius (this thing being known) was grievous forrowfull, and when as he being a youth, according to his manner, being at leisure, had come to him, not daring for the eye of the oath, to warn him by words, drew him apart by degrees from friends; and when they were alone, his Spear being turned upside down, he wrote, he beholding him, Flee Mithridates; and the matter being understood, fled away by night into Cappadocia. But destiny proved the foolish Dream of Antigonus to be true, by and by: for Mithridates possessed a large and good Country, and was the author of the Kingdom of Pontus; which the Romans under about the eighth King, overthrew. Plutarch, in Demetrius.

55.

Attia, the Mother of Augustus Cesar, sleeping in the Temple of Apollo, she seemed to be commingled with a Dragon, and the moneths for bringing forth being fulfilled, she brought forth. Moreover, before she brought forth, she dreamed, that her bowels were carried on high into Heaven, and were powred forth into the whole World. The same night, Octavius saw in his sleep, that he sprang out of his mother's womb. When the Infant was now born, Negidius Figulus, a Senator, presently foretold unto the Father, the highest royall authority unto his son. Plutarch, in Augustus.

56.

Octavius, when he led an Army thorow Thracia, and had asked counfel of the Oracle of Bacchus concerning his son Augustus; the night following he presently seemed to see his son more sumptuous than in a mortal shape, with a thunder-bolt and Scepter, and the the spoils of Jupiter the most excellent gear, and a charior covered over with a shining crown of Bay, twelve hotties of an exceeding whiteness drawing it. Q. Catulus, after the dedication of the Capitol, for two nights together dreamed; in the first, The most excellent great Jupiter, many boyes in robes of purple playing together about the Alar, separated one, and to have laid into his bosom the sinde of the Common-wealth which he carried in his hand; and in the night following, to have observed, that he, the same child being in the lap or bosome of Jupiter Capitolinus, when he had commanded to be withdrawn, was forbidden by the warning of the god, as though he should be brought up for the safeguard of the Common-wealth. And the next day beholding Augustus meeting him, nor without admiration, he said, he was most like to the Lad of whom he had dreamed. Some unfold the first dream of Catulus otherwise, as though Jupiter, many boyes together cloathed in purple robes requiring a defender from him, had shewn one among them, unto whom they should bring back all their desires, and had brought his kifs untouched with his fingers, unto his mouth. Marcus Cicero having followed C. Julius Caesar into the Capitol, he by chance told the dream of the foregoing night unto his familiar friends: a boy of a free countenance, let down from heaven by a golden chain, to have stood at the doors of the Capitol, and Jupiter to have delivered unto him a whip. And then suddenly Augustus being seen, whom as yet unknown to most, his Uncle Caesar had brought to sacrifice, he affirmed him to be he, whose likenesse at the time of sleep was presented before him. Suetonius.

It is agreed amongst all, That Vespasian the Emperour was so sure alwayes of the off-spring of him and his, that after daily conspiracies against him, he dared to affirm to the Senate, Either his sons were to succeed him, or none. It is said also, that he saw a certain ballance (at rest) placed in the middle part of the Porch of the Palatine-house, with an equall beam, when as in the one scale, Claudius and Nero stood; in the other he and his sons. Neither did the thing deceive, when as both commanded so many years, and with the like space of time. They say, Nero, in his sleep, was in his last dayes put in mind, that he should bring forth the Charior to the most excellent great Jupiter out of the Vestry, into the house of Vespasian, and into the Circle.

Adrian, the day before he was ordained Emperour, saw at Antioch of Syria, in his sleep, a fire to fall from Heaven on the left part to his neck or throat, straightway to creep on the right; with which fire, he seemed to himself to be neither sore afraid, nor hurt. Dion. of Nicæa, & Xiphiline in Adrian.

59.

Alexander, while he assaulteth the City of Tyre for 7. months, with Bullwarks, Engines, and two hundred oar-galleys on the Sea side, saw Hercules, at his rest, stretching out his hand to him from the wall, and inviting him. Apollo seemed to say to many of the Tyrians in the dreams, that they should passe over unto Alexander, for neither should those things which should be done in the City be effected by them. But they as traitors of the wickedness found out, bound the Image of Apollo with chains, and fastened him to the foot of a pillar with nails, calling him a favourer of Alexander. Another shape was set before Alexander in the night. A Satyre was offered to him. The which when he endeavoured quickly to take, it withdrew it self; at length, after many intreaties and runnings about of his, it came into his hand. The diviner, the name being divided asunder, not absurdly answered, Sa-Turos, Tyre shall be thine, because [Sa] with the Greeks, signifieth shine. They shew a spring, at which next after sleep, he saw the Satyre. Plutarch. Alexander.

60.

Eumenes, when he thought Neoptolemus and Crater to move against him, and provided to move by night; by and by being overcharged with sleep, a wonderful Vision was offered to him. He seemed to see two Alexanders at a battle joyned between themselves, and both to lead all the wings: hence, to the one came Minerva; to the other Ceres, for help. A sharp conflict being begun, that being scattered for whom Minerva stood, Ceres, ears of corn being divided asunder, weaved a crown for the Conquerour. This being seen, he conjectured it was the second to him, who for a very good field, and at that time having a famous ear of Corn in the knop of a Rose, did fight. For it was full of down seed, and pease yielded a bright shew, the fields having long grass in great plenty. He was now more raised up; after that he understood Minerva and Alexander to be a sign of battle to the enemies. He therefore gave also Ceres and Alexander a sign to his Souldiers, that they should redeem their head and weapons with the Crown made of ears of Corn. A battel being joyned, he slew Neoptolemus and Crater. Plutarch. in Eumenes.

61.

Timoleon, chief Commander of the Corinthians, a Navy being prepared for help of the Sicilians, against Dionysius the Tyrant, and all things being delivered or supplied, which an Army had need of, the Priests of Proserpina seemed to see Ceres and Proserpina to go far from home, adorning themselves, and with Timoleon, saying, They were to sayl into Sicily. Wherefore they provided an holy Galley with oars of Corinth, named Drabus. He had seven Corinthian ships, The Leucadians afforded the tenth, when he looseth from these parts; when it was late in the night, and he was carried with a prosperous wind, on a sudden, the Heaven seemed to him to be clef, and a plentiful and clear flame to have been powred forth upon the ship. From thence a Torch lifted up, that was proper to the myſtical or hidden things, and accompanying and holding the ſame courſe, what part of Italy the Governours moſt eſpecially deſired, it was brought into that. The Prophets affirmed this ſhew to agree with the Dreams of the Priſts, and that the goddeſſes were at hand in this voyage, and to ſhine before them with this ſhining brightneſſe. For Scilly was holy to Proſerpina; ſon there they ſable ſhe was allured, and that this Iſland was given her for a nuptial gift. And truly after this manner was the Navy confirmed. Plutarch, in Timoleon.

ed

AS the Dream of Hannibal, Captain of the Carthaginians, was deſteſtable to the Roman blood; ſo, of a certain foretelling whole nor onely wakings, but alſo very ſleep, was ominous unto the Roman Empire. For he drew forth an Image agreeable to his purpoſe, and deſires; and he thought a young man more noble than in a mortal ſhape, to be ſent unto him from Jupiter. By whoſe warning, at firſt, his eyes following his ſteps into no part, ſtraightway a ready will of keeping an humane win being feared, looking behind him, he perceiveth a Serpent of a huge greatneſſe, with a ſtirred force, treading every thing whatſoever he had met with under feet: and after him, ſhowres breaking forth with a great noiſe of heaven, and the light rolled up within very obſcure darkneſs. And then being aſtoniſhed, he asked, What that Monſter was, what it might betoken? This is a Captain; thou ſeeſt (ſaith he) the deſolation of Italy; therefore be ſilent, and leave other things unto ſilent deſtinies. Valer. Max. in book. 1. chap. 7.

62.

70

A Mandatus is a ſervant from Mardonius unto the Oracle of Amphiaras, to enquire about thoſe things which they ſhould execute. But he thought, in his ſleep, a ſervant of the god was ſtanding by him, at firſt indeed to drive him back by word, as if the god had been abſent: but ſtraightway, as leſſe obeying, to thruſt him alſo with his hand. Laſt of all, to him ſtubbornly abiding, to have daſhed a great ſtone in his head. Tavra & lu dury dylowia & mabrov. That is, But theſe things were miſ ſounds of things to come. For Mardonius was overcome at Plata in a great battle, and being ſmit-ten with a ſtone, was ſlain. Celius, book 19. chap. 15. out of Plutarch.

63.

XERXES, the ſon of Darius, King of the Persians, was about to bring war on the Greeks; Artabanus ſon of Hystaſpes, the Uncle of Xerxes, exceedingly withſtood it. Xerxes although fretting, yet he had purpoſed to obey Artabanus. But the deſtinies urging him, he had the ſame dream twice. He ſaw a man in a noble likeneſſe, chiding him, becauſe he deſerted to bring War on Greece. The thing being talked of with Artabanus, he conſtrained Artabanus cloathed with the King's garments, to take a ſleep in the King's 64.

Throne. The same resemblance was also presented before the eyes of Aristobolus: Therefore he intreated Xerxes unto the Warr of Greece, with no less diligence than before he had withstood: indeed the evil fate of Xerxes so urging it, that the most proud King might pay the punishments of his rashness and pride. The same Xerxes seemed to himself to be crowned with an Olive-branch, with the boughs of which Olive the whole Earth was overwhelmed, and presently the Crown, tyed fast about his head, vanished: This dream was more famous and sure than the former. Xerxes had affrighted the world with Warlike preparation, and now seemed to triumph over Greece, Athens being taken, when as he was by the diligence of Themistocles broken, he was forced by a shamefull flight to shift for his life. Herodotus, book 7.

65. The Spartans, Callicratidas being Captain, were to fight at Artemisium in a Sea-battell with the Athenians, the diviners on both sides dissuading them. For the head of a sacrificed beast lying on the shore, dispersed the Lacedemonians, being drawn through the rage of a wave; the Soothsayers shewed, all these things betokened that the Pretor of the Navy was to perish in that combat. Which thing being heard, they say Callicratidas answered, he should withdraw nothing from the Spartans worthinesse, if by fighting he should fall. But unto Thrasibulus the Athenian, who being then Pretor, led the Navy, and to whom that day, the top of Royall Authority had come by lot, by night this dream appeared. It seemed to him, together with six other Pretors, to act the Tragedy of Euripides, whose title is inscribed, [Phoenissae] in the common Theatre. But it seemed his adversaries acting the Tragedy, whose name is [Supplix], the Cadmean Victory to have happened to them, and all to have perished, by imitating the Captains, who had pitched their Tents for the assaulting of Thebes. These things being heard, a Prophet being called to interpret, they so expounded it, that seven Captains were to fall in that battell. But the holy things otherwise openly promising Victory, he bade the Captains, that it may be shewed unto their companions alone concerning every ones death, but that they divulge a Victory (betokened by those very holy things) throughout the whole Army. A battell being joyned, Callicratidas, some Ships of the Enemies being first overcharged, dyed; the conquest remained in the power of the Athenians, 25. Ships being lost, 77. of the Enemies sunk. They fought on both sides, with little lesse then four hundred Ships, and that battell is mentioned to be the greatest of all, which indeed Greeks with Greeks ever fought. Diodore, in Book 13.

66. Unto Pyrrhus King of the Epirots besieging Sparta, such a dream was offered. All Lacedemon being stricken with a Thunderbolt, seemed to him thereby to be set on fire, and he thereupon to leap for joy. He being stirred up with gladnesse, commands his Captains, that they set the Souldiers in order, and expoundeth the dream dream to his friends; as if he was to vanquish the City. Unto which thing when as others wonderfully agreed, the sight pleased not Pyrrhus. He saith, he feared, least as the places that were blasted with Thunderbolts, remain inaccessible, so the god signified to Pyrrhus, that he was not to enter the City. When as Pyrrhus answered this man, Those were meer delusions, and full of uncertainty, but that every man holding weapons in his hands, ought to bring into his remembrance.

Optimum illi augurium, pro Pyrrho exponere vitam.

*Of Divination that's the chief,
For Pyrrhus to adventure life.*

In the first of the morning he sets upon the City. But the Lacedaemonians nor sluggishly and beyond their strength, defending themselves, he was constrained to loose the siege. Plutarch. in Pyrrhus.

CN. Pompey, having followed King Mithridates unto Euphrates, fell by night. At which time it is blazed by report, that Mithridates saw a resemblance in his sleep, which foreshewed him things to come. It seemed to him to sail in the Pontick Sea, with a prosperous wind, and now to foresee Bosphorus, and courteously to speak to those that were carried together with him, as who rejoiceth in his sure and undoubted safety: but suddenly he was found forsaken by all, and tossed in a small broken piece of a Ship. His friends standing by, stirred him up, being buffed with those troubles and Images, shewing that Pompey was at hand. A fight therefore (instead of a bulwark) being begun, he was overcome. Far more than ten thousand were slain, and the Camps were taken; Mithridates himself with a draught of eight hundred Horsemen with him brake through the Romans. By and by the rest sliding away, he is left alone with three, among whom was the Harlot Hippocratia, who had alway been of a manly boldnesse: Wherefore the King called her Hippocratia. But then she being cloathed with a man's Persian garment, and carried on a Horse, neither seemed she to be weary in body from the tediousnesse of the flight, neither the Kings body and horse being taken care of, was he tired untill they came unto the Towre or Castle Ichor, where the Kings Money and Treasures were heaped up. Thence Mithridates took his precious stones, which he distributed unto those that assembled unto him out of the flight. Moreover he gave a deadly poyson to a certain friend of his to be carried with him, lest any one should come into the enemies hands. From thence he strives to go into Armenia to Tigranes. Which thing, when he forbade him, and had pronounced a hundred talents on his head, the Springs of Euphrates being passed by, he bends his flight through Colchis. Plutarch in Pompey.

Before

68. BEfore the pharsalian fight, it seemed to Cn. Pompey by night in this sleep, he entering into the Theatre, the people to applaud him; and that he adorned the Temple of Venus the Conqueress with many spoils. This sight partly raised him up, partly made him carefull, fearing somewhat, least Grace and famousnesse should come from him unto Cesar's family, chanting on Venus, and some Panick fears awakened him out of sleep. In the fourth watch over Cesar's Camps, where all things were quiet, a great light shined out. A flaming Torch kindled thereby, was brought into Pompey's Camps. Cesar himself said he saw this, while he went about the Watches. The same Author, in the same place.

69. Hecuba being great with young, she seemed to bring forth a burning Torch, which burned Asia and Europe. She not long after brought forth Paris, by whose unchast loves, the country of Troy being destroyed, their forces being wasted, Greece was consumed by a long war, and undone. Sabellius, book 1. ib. 1. Volaterran, book 18. Anthropol.

70. Cambyses King of Persians, saw Smerdes (in his sleep) sitting in the Kings Throne, to touch the Heaven with his Crown. He for that thing, fearing lest his Brother Smerdes should possesse the Kingdome; sent Prexaspes to kill him. Neither yet could he avoid even this by his brother-killing Murder; whereby Smerdes the Magician, who feigned himself to be the true Smerdes Son of Cyrus, should the less invade the Kingdome. Cambyses going up to horse, being wounded in the Thigh with a Sword, died. Herodotus, Book 3.

71. Darius had moved out of Susa against Alexander, being supported with a multitude of Armies (for he had six hundred thousand Souldiers under his Ensigns) trusting to a certain dream, the which (the Magicians flattering him) had interpreted more than according to the likeness of truth. The troop of the Macedonians seemed to shine together with a great brightness of fire. But Alexander to wait on him in the habit wherewith he had been clothed, when he was [Ascandes] that is, a Messenger, or [Ascantes] that is Chamberlain to the King: And when he had entred into the Temple of Belus, to have been withdrawn from before his eyes. By these things (in my opinion) God foreshewed that the Macedonians were to carry on honourable and famous matters, and Alexander to obtain Asia; as Darius had enjoyed it, being of a Messenger or Chamberlain, made King, but in a short time to lay down his life with his glory. Plutarch, in Alexander. Curtius hath delivered, that the King imagined the Camps to shine with a great brightness. Sabellius, Book 4. Ennead, 4.

They

They report, Domitian to have dreamed that a bunch sprang out from him behind a Golden neck; and to have had it for certain, that a more blessed and joyfull condition of the Commonwealth was foretold to be after him. As indeed it so fell out in a short time, through the abstinence and moderation of following Princes. Sueton.

72.

Ezeline, surnamed Monk, a bloody and most cruel Tyrant, at his rest saw the fortune of his sons, that night in which he first came together with his wife, who was by name Adela, a Tuscan, of the stock of the ancient Earls of Montaion. For he seemed to himself to see a little hill, in which a Roman Town was (in the Patavine field) placed (the which he commanded, and was thence called Romanus or a Roman) To to be carried up and exalted, that it touched heaven with its top, and the same a little after, to be melted as Snow, and so to be let down, that it could no more stand up. The changes of his sons brought this effect: For the elder Son, and he Ezeline by name, possessed the rule of Verona, Patavium, Vincetia, Feltrium, and Cividale, and Marchia. But the younger, Alberick, entred on the Kingdom of Tarvisum, and other places. But afterwards, fortune changing, in the two hundred fifty and sixty year, above the thousandth of salvation, when as the Pope and the Guelphians together, had moved war against Ezeline his son, he lost Patavium, with the whole land. But when he trusted that he should possess the City of Mediolan by craft, and for that thing had passed over the River Abdua, being besieged by his enemies, overcome in battell, a wound being received, being taken nigh to Sonsinum, in that very same place he died, and was buried. His brother Alberick being stricken with fear by this chance, when as he distrusted that he could keep Tarvisum, he betook himself into the Castle of Saint Zeno. Where, in the year of Salvation, 1200. being betrayed by his own Souldiers, he came into the power of his enemies. There having beheld six sons to be killed before him, and his wife Margaret with two young maids to be burnt, he himself being cut through all his limbs by piece-meal, he saw (as his father had in his dreams) his Roman stock, or nation, to be ended. Pulgosus, book 1. chap. 5.

73.

THe Mother of Phalaris saw Mercury (whose Image holding a goblet in his hand, she worshipped at her own house, among the shapes of gods) in her dreams to sprinkle blood on the ground out of that goblet, and being dashed on the pavement, to bubble back, untill by little and little it overflowed all the house up to the top. That which was seen in one, the bloody cruelty of her son made true in many houses. Ponticus Heraclicus is the Author of this Vision, a learned man, as saith Tully, and Scholler of Plato. Petrarcha.

74.

75.

A Miltar Captain of the Carthaginians, besieging Syracuse, seemed to hear in his sleep, that the next day after he should sup within the walls of the besieged City. By that thing being turned to a hope of Conquest, he being chearfull, set the Army in order in the morning to besiege the City. Unto him considering and attempting such enterprises, as often comes to passe, a great uproar arose in the Camps, the Carthaginians and Sicilians disagreeing among themselves. The Townes-men laying hold of the occasion, come suddenly forth of the Gates, and their enemies being scattered, the Conquerours take their Captain, desiring to succour their ranks being disturbed, and therefore neglecting himself. And so being brought into the City, supping in fevers, he understood what a false expounder of the dream he had been. Valer. Max. Book 1. chap. 7. and Cicero, Book 1. Of Divination. Artemidore writeth, a shew was presented to a certain one in his sleep, as that he should sup with Saturn; and it so happened, that the day following, he was cast into Prison. Calio, Book 13. chap. 21. Of Book of Antiq.

76.

Jupiter commanded T. Latinus, a man of the common people, in his sleep, that he should tell the Consuls that he was not pleased with the neighbouring Circean playes, of the leaders of the dance, which thing, unless being heeded, it were satisfied by the renewing of sports, no small danger of the City was to follow. He fearing least with some disprofit unto his Religion, he should extoll the highest command, kept silence. And straightway his Son, being taken with the sudden force of a disease, died. He also at the time of sleep, being asked by the same, whether he had sufficiently weighed the great punishment of his royall command neglected, continuing in his purpose, was recompenced with a weakness of his body. And then at length by the counsell of his friends, being brought in a horse-litter, unto the Consuls Judgment-seat, and from thence to the Senate, the order of his whole chance being explained, with the great admiration of all, the strength of his members being recovered, he returned home on his feet. Valerius, in book 1. chap. 7. Cicero, in book 1. Of Divination. And Livy, book 2. Decad. 1.

77.

The Tartars inhabit beyond the Mountain Belgia, the Sea lying between. Changius, or their fifth Emperour, saw again a white horseman, who had foretold unto him the Empire, in his sleep, that it was the will of the immortal god, That in the Mountain Belgia being passed over, they should go forward into the West, and subdue all Kingdoms. But as soon as they had come to the Mountain Belgia, in that part which the Sea floweth on the Mountain, that they should go down, and their faces being turned toward the East, they with nine bowings of the knee, worship the immortal God. Changiu obeyed, and all his people being led out, he compelled them to continue all night in prayers. The morning being come, he saw the Sea to have went back from the Mountain, nine feet, and on that side he led his whole Army on dry ground thorow the waste wildernesses into Asia. Haithon the Armenian in his book of the Tartars.
immortall

Hannibal, Captain of the Carthaginians, had decreed to carry away a golden pillar, being found in the Temple of Juno Lucina. But being not sure, whether it was of sound gold, or whether it was gilded with gold nigh the superficies, by solemnizing an assembly, he tryed it, and being made sure, that it was all of gold, he was confirmed in his purpose of snatching it away; unto whom the shape of Juno seemed to be present, while he dreamed: she admonished him, that he should abstain from covetous and sacrilegious enterprizes; threatening, if he proceeded, that he would deprive him of one eye wherewith he should see the ground, or the Sun; with which sleep, the Captain otherwise cruell, and who feared no god, there was no Religion, as was written of him, yet it is delivered, being moved, he daring to move nothing out of the place of that very gold, which had fallen out of a hole while he tryed it, he took care to have a warlike Engine made, and to be placed on the top of the pillar. Petrarcha.

78.

Valens, Emperour, in his sleep, saw a certain man, saying these words unto him;

79.

*Be gone with haste unto great Mimas: thee the grievous force
Of destiny, dreading thy self, shall from thy life divorce.*

He being awakened out of sleep, asked the standers by, What place was called Mimas? And when at length, a certain one of the Grammarians or Oratours, who follow the Kings Court, had said, Mimas was a Mountain of Asia, of which Homer had made mention in his Ilysses: And to aieri Mimas. The Emperour laughing, answered, What necessity enforceth me of seeing this place, and seeking a lot? But when, fighting against the Alanians, the Emperour was burnt in a little cottage about Adranopolis of Thracia, the Barbarians departing from thence, some Souldiers of Valens diligently searched out his dead carcass. In that cottage where he perished, was found an old grave of a certain ancient man, with this Inscription, Mimas a Governour of the Macedonians, was here laid. Therefore that dream of Valens was fulfilled. Cuspi-

That which was once set before Julius Caesar in his sleep, before that he had moved into neather France, and brought offensive weapons on the City, when at his rest, it seemed to him, he ravish-

80.

ed his mother: By which dream, the expounders stirred him up unto a most large hope, having interpreted, That the rule of the world should be given him. The same dream they mention, was offered to Hippias, son of Pisistratus, with no unlike issue, who being his succeder in tyranny, used his Country more cruelly. For a night resemblance of his Mother, with whom he seemed to copulate, is said to be set before him at the time of sleep; for which thing the Interpreters answered, That rule was largely betokened unto him. And he being put in mind by his dream, and full of hope, not long after he enjoyed the dominion of Athens. For this is that Hippias, who having attempted a tyrannical power, not without cruel wickedness, was more outrageous and unbridled than his father, when as being a banished man, he had changed his soyl, he moved wicked arms against his Country. At last conspiring with Darius, being slain in the Marathonian fight, he yielded punishments to his Country and household-gods. But another son of the same Pisistratus, Hipparch, who exceeded the cruelty of many Tyrants, when as he oppressed his Country and Citizens with a cruel Lordlike, a conspiracy being made against the life of the Tyrant, he was, by Armodius and Aristogiton, most valiant young men, not without the safety of all, slain: whose names being devored to freedom, lest at any time it should be lawfull to institute servants, the Athenians established with an open abhorrency. Alexander, book 3. chap. 26.

81. Sabacus, King of Ethiopia, possessed the Kingdom of Egypt fifty years, which being finished, the god, which is worshipped at Thebes, was seen to say unto him; His reign over the Egyptians should not be happy, nor of long continuance, unless, the Priests of Egypt being all slain, he should passe thorow the midst of their dead carcasses with his. This dream being often set before him, he called together all the Priests on every side, and what things he had received through the dream being told them; He would not be faith, build a remaining destruction for any one in Egypt, but had rather abstain from the Kingdom of Egypt, being pure and free of all wickedness. Diodore the Sicilian, & Herodotus, book 3.

82. Sethon, King of Egypt, Priest of Vulcan, when as he despised the Egyptians, he made use of a foreign Soldier, and stripped the Egyptians of their fields. For this wrong, it came to pass, that after Sennacherib King of Arabians and Assyrians had invaded Egypt with a great Army, the Egyptians would not help him. Then the chief Priest, void of counsel, betook himself into the Garret or Chamber of his House, and there bewailed before the Image, how much he was in danger. Therefore while he was lamenting, sleep crept on him, and while he slept, the god seemed to stand by, exhorting him, that he was to suffer no hurtfull thing; if he went to meet the Army of the Arabians, for he would send him helpers. The

The Priest trusting to these dreams, those that were willing of the Egyptians being taken, Merchants, or Factors, and handycraftsmen or labourers, he pitched his Tents in Pelusium; for, in this, is the Egyptian invaded. When he had come thither, in the night, a great multitude of field-Mice suddenly arising, gnawed asunder both the quivers, bowes, and also the rains of the bucklers in the Camps of their enemies; so that the next day, the enemies being naked of weapons, made flight, many being lost. And now in that Temple of Vulcan, the King stands in stone, holding a mouse in his hand, and by letters saying these words; who so looketh on me, let him be godly. Herodotus, book 2.

Of Miracles of Devils, or of divers deceits and mocks of evil Dæmons, to strengthen the Idolatry of the Gentiles.

1. THe power of Vesta warranted (the fire being gone out) a woman Schollar of the Virgin Emilia, to be safe from all blame, who worshipping, when she had laid a Cyprus garment (the which she had a very good one) on the hearth, the fire suddenly shone out. Valerius, book 1. chap. 1.
2. They say, Aeneas to have placed household-gods brought from Troy, at Lavinium; thence being brought over to Alba, by his son Ascanius, the which he had built, to have returned again to the ancient Chappel; and because that might be thought to be done by man's hand, being brought back again to Alba, to have signified his will by another passage. Valer. Max. book 1. chap. 8.
3. NOr onely the Egyptians, but almost all the World anciently worshipped Isis for her Miracles: for this goddess healed the diseases of those that were not well in health, in their sleep; and they who did obey her counsel, were cured beyond thought. Also those that were weak in their sight, or in other part of the body, humbly intreating the vertue of the goddess, were restored unto their former health. Diodore Siculus, book 1. chap. 2. of Ancient Things.
4. IN the Temple of Asculapius among the Epidaurians, they who came to pray to the god, they sleep; and in their sleep, do learn the reason of recovering health. And then they put squares in the Temple, containing the names of those that were cured, and the manner of curing. Pausanias, in his Corinthian affairs. There was the same custome among the Romans, even to the Times of the Antonines, that which we may understand from a Marble Table of Rome found in the Temple of Asculapius in the Island Tiberis, and by the Ataphæans kept even to this day, in which these words are read, rendred out of Greek in the Latine speech, as witnesseth Jer. Mercurialis, a most Learned Physitian, in his first book of exercise. In these dayes the Oracle told Caius, a certain blind man, that he should come to the holy Altar, and should bend his knees; he should come from the right part to the left, and should place his his five fingers upon the Altar, and should lift up his hand, and put it upon his own eyes, and he saw well, the people being present, and giving thanks because great miracles were done under our Emperour Aotinine. The god answered by the Oracle unto Julian vomiting up blood, being despaired of by all men, that he should come, and should take from the Altar Pine-kernells, and should eat them together with honey for three dayes; and he was well, and, being alive, openly gave thanks in the presence of the people; the god gave an Oracle unto Kalerim Aper a blind Soldier, that he should come, and take the blood of a white Cock, mingling honey with it, and should make a washing water, and should use it three dayes upon his eyes, and he saw and came, and openly gave thanks to God. Lucin being troubled with a pain of the side, and despaired of by all men, the god gave an Oracle, He should come, and take ashes from the Altar, and should mingle it together with a pretious Pearl, and should lay it upon his side, and he was in health, and openly gave thanks to God: and the people gave thanks together with him.

A Riftides a Rhetorician of Smyrna, when as an Earthquake was at hand, was commanded by Esculapins to go a little before, unto the ancient house, and on the top of the little hill Atys to perform holy things, and to build Altars; the which when he had scarce finished, the Earthquake arising, so shook indeed all the Countrey lying between, that it left no house to resort unto, but it came not to Atys, nor touched any thing beyond it. Idobauts, in 3. speech.

THe Perians being vanquished and plundered by Camillus, it seemed meet, to carry away the Ensign that was in Junos Tower unto Rome, as he had vowed. Artificers being called together unto that thing, Camillus performed holy things, and having prayed the goddesse, that she would embrace the endeavour of the Romans, and being willing, that she go with her favours unto the gods inhabiting Rome: they say, the Ensign spake with a low voice, she was willing, and to agree by nodding. Livy delivereth, that while he prayed, Camillus to have handled the goddesse, and invited her, thereupon some of the standers by, to have answered, she was willing, and to agree and follow willingly. Plutarch, in Camillus.

A Alexander the Great making a Bulwark in the Sea to vanquish Tyre, suddenly a Whale of incredible bignesse, swam to it and one part of his body being bended on the Bulwark, he stood there a long time, with the great affrightment of all beholders. He again swam out, at last into the Sea. Hence a very great Religion or superstition possessed both, thinking that to betoken, Neptune would be a helper to the Macedonians, his mind being inclined even unto that which they desired. One told that such a kind of sight appeared to him in the City, as though Apollo had said, The City of Tyre should be forsaken by them. That thing when the common people thought it was feigned by that man in favour of Alexander, and now some young ones would stone him, he being withdrawn by the Magistrates out of the midst of them, fled into the Temple of Hercules, and so by the safeguard of the god whom he had implored, he was freed from punishment at hand. But the Tyrians in nothing more. They were slipp'd him with much superstition, who linked Apollo's Statue and Image with golden chains, and so by that means they supposed him to be so fettered, that he could no more depart from their City; but for all that, their City was taken, and Alexander took off the golden chains and fetters from Apollo, with which the Tyrians had linked him, and commanded, that he should be called Philalexander; and so he finished that magnificent sacrifice unto Hercules. Diodorus, lib. 17.

kind

8.

Phillippides the Athenian, being sent Embassadour and Legate to Lacedemonia, about the invasion and breaking in of the Persians into Greece, returning home again much reprehended the delays and stay of the Lacedemonians, who would not bring out their Army before the full Moon, and meeting Pan, or the god Pan, in the Parthian Grove, who promised that he would ayd the Athenians in the fight at Marathon, which was to be a while after. And so from this sprung the honours that the Athenians vouchsafed to the god, or gods messenger. Pausanias, lib. 1.

9.

IN the Mubridatick Warr, when Mubridates besieged and hovered over Cyzicum with the wings of his Army, the gods seemed to favour the Cyzenians, and to approve of their fortitude, and to excite it by some perspicuous and transparent signs and tokens at sundry times, as well as at Proserpina's feast then instant. When they wanted a black Ox to sacrifice, they brought one made of bread-corn artificially made in paste, to the Altar; but the holy or consecrated Cow which was at leeding, afterwards to be sacrificed to that Goddess, was at pasture over Sea with the rest of the flock of the Cyzenians; in that same day leaving the rest of the flock and herd, swam over alone to the Town, and willingly offered it self to be sacrificed; moreover, their goddess appeared in a dream unto Arissagoras the publick School-master; Truly, saith she, here I am, and I drive and force the African Fidler or Musitian into the Trumpeter of Pontus; do thou therefore command thy Citizens to be of good cheer. The Cyzenians marvelled much at this speech; and as soon as it was break of day, and that the bright Luciferian Star, Phœbus's harbinger, did periwig the horizon with his silver'd locks, the Sea began to boyl, as though a huge wind had agitated and stirr'd it, the quaverings, machines, and engines of the King's wall, and the famous (yea supererogating works) of the Thessalian Nicomedes, with their great noise and crack did prophesie and foretell foretell what would come to pass; afterwards a very stormy South-wind did rise, which in a semi-moments space did so palfie and shoulder-shake a wooden Tower of the height of a hundred cubits, and other machinaments and fortifications, that it levelled their sky-towing tops with the ground. But some relate it thus; That Minerva was seen in Visions to very many, to whom she appeared in their dreams, sweat trickling down her, and shewed part of her embroidered garment or veil which was rent; and that she said, She was even now come from ayding the Cyrenians. But Mithridates being almost famished, (although not in Hungaria) gave over the siege, and returned into Bythina, Lucullus following him. Plutarchus.

THe Batians being enslaved and captivated by the Thracians, when they plumed their feet, and flew into the Trochensan den, it was told them in a Dream, That Bacchus was to be their helper; they fell upon the Thracians being drunk, (having Bacchus with them also) they redeemed one another, and built a Temple to Bacchus their redeemer; as Heraculus Ponticus writes.

10.

IT is reported, That Cleomebus, King of the Spartans, after the *Agi-*ans were vanquished, sacrificing in Juno's Temple, a flame of fire streamed out of the breasts of the Image; which was an evident sign that Argos was not to be conquered by assault; for if the flame had issued out of the head of the image, it would have intimated, That he should win and take the City from the Tower: but when the lightning sprung out of her breasts, then all was done that the gods would have done. Herodotus, lib. 6.

11.

IN a black sorrowful conflict and battel at Pharsalia, in which Pompey was overcome by Cæsar, which was foreshewed and written by great and wonderful signs and wonders, in Elide, there was an image of Victory which stood in Minerva's Temple, which had its back to the gate, and in that same day that the battel was fought, of its own accord it turned towards the door. At Antiochus in Syria, and in a Town by the red-Sea called Ptolemais, twice in that very same day there was such a noise heard about that City, as though there were a great mutiny and murmuring of Soldiers about the walls, and there was the noise of a Drum heard in Sergamus's Temple. Valerius, lib. 1. cap. 6.

12.

When Attila, the King of the Hunns, made an attempt about the intrenching upon the borders of the Roman Empire, the images of their gods was not onely seen in the night, but also in the day time to command every one to pray for himself, and that crimson and bloody drops came from Heaven, and two headed monstrous Infants were born, and many of their consecrated houses and Temples were struck with lightning, and a voice was oft heard, 13.

Cave

Cave tibi Italia, O Italy, take heed to thy self. Bonfinius, lib. 3. Decad. 1.

14. A Little before the destruction and demolishment of Troy, the fire in Minerva's Temple did spare, to burn the sacrifices that were laid upon the Altars; the common people being much troubled at this thing, flocked together to Apollo's Temple to the Altar there, and laying the parts of the intrails upon it, and fire being put to that, on a suddain all things began to be disturbed, fell to the ground; by which Spectacle all the people being enter'd in, much afraid and dismayed, incontinently there came an Eagle with a huge noise, and snatched away a part of the intrails, and carried them to the Grecian ships. Diſt. lib. 5.

15. Cæsar Augustus in one part of the Capitol, erected a Temple to thundring Jove, which he had vowed in the Cambrick War, and did frequent this dedicated place daily, and he thought he saw in his Dream, Jupiter complain, that he had taken away his worshippers; and that he answered, that there was the Thunderer set for his Porter; And by and by, he decked and encompassed the top of the dedicated place with little bells, which then in a manner did hang and were pendent upon the gates and doors.

16. Zonaras Annalius, tom. 3. relates, That under Anastasius the Manichean Emperour, a Magician, a most wicked man, that had set up a brazen Image to the Goddess Fortune, in the shape of a Country woman, whose feet being brass, stood in a ship which was of the same metal, in the City of Constantinople; which aforesaid ship was either eaten away by hungry time, or broken by some other secret means, so that some fragments were taken away from it. And for this cause, laden ships could not arrive any more at Byzantium; but whensoever they approached near to it, they were driven back again by the violence of the winds, and unless they had brought their bagg and baggage in long Vessels or Ships rowed with Oars, perhaps the people might have been famished; which thing continuing for a good while, at last the Magistrates took care of the business, and the cause of this dysaster, they enquired of a Magician, a notable diviner, and so, that the broken pieces and fragments of that brazen Ship being diligently sought up, and gimmer'd and set in their proper places, then the Sea or Harbour was filled with voyage, navigation, and little ships; but as soon as they knew certainly the obstacle, at the last, the fragments were dislocated; and whatsoever ships were to arrive there, by the strength of the winds, were cast and driven back; and the thing being discovered, the Ship was renewed and made up again with great care and pains.

THere were in a Tower in Athens Olive-trees, dedicated to Pallas, which were called Moria Halirhotius the son of Neptune, did attempt to cut them down with an Axe, because, by reason of their making and production, he was overcome by Minerva and as he was a hewing of them, struck himself by the axe and by that wound he perished. Cælius, lib. 12. cap. 20.

17.

Some say that Esculapius was not born of the Nymph Coronis but of an Egg of a little Crow, because the Greek word κρονοεις significeth both a little Crow, and also a Nymph so called, as Lucian in his Dialogue, de falso vate affirms. It is reported of the Antient Priests, who included and put a very little Serpent into a wind-Egg of a Crow, and studiously anointed it with wax; and hid it in a certain myery, and by and by an Altar was erected in that place, and he called the people together to a Sermon, or Oration, and when he had declared openly before them all, that he was about to shew himself to be a god. After the Oration was ended using some unknown uncouth words, he invocated and called upon Apollo and Esculapius, that they would be propitious and fortunate, and draw near to that City. Afterwards dipping a water-pot into a deep place, to fetch up some water, he brought up the water, together with that Egg, which he broke, a great company being by, and finding in it a young Serpent, he brought them all into a wonderfull admiration, but afterwards shewing a Serpent of a great bignesse in a gloomy place, a few dayes being spent, moving it self artificially, he said that it was so appointed, that he should declare that the god Esculapius was the son of Apollo. And afterwards Serpents were committed to his tutorage and care, and his badge or arms was a staff linked about with a Serpent. Ut scribit Dercilus Natalis Comes Mythol. lib. 4. cap. 11.

18.

IN the year 474. after the building of Rome, there was one Atronius Maximus, that led through the Circle or Theatre, his servant that was sore beaten, tyed and chained to a Gibbet before the concertation of the spectators, for this cause Jupiter was angry and commanded one Annius that he should tell the Senate of this, and that he was not pleased with a fast so full of cruelty; and he smothering this, his son dyed suddenly, and for unveiling and declaring Jupiters counsell, the second time, was cured of a great weaknesse that tainted and debilitated him; so at last by the counsell and perswasion of his friends, he was carried in his couch to the Senate, and when he had scarce finished his declaration he recovered his health, and went out of the Court on his feet, therefore the Senate did confute, and also by the Mælian Law that those Circean dayes were to be added to pacify Jupiter, and therefore was called Lustration, not from the Gibbet as some conceive from the Greek words ἀπο τῆς αἰσῆς, but from the redintegration and renewing and making up of the breach, as Varro thinks, quia in-

19.

Staurare, he saith, is instar novare. Macrobius, lib. 1. Saturnal. cap. 11.

20.

THe Argonautes report that going out of Sigea, they were tossed and tumbled with a cruel Tempest, and almost all of them in such a great danger despairing, they by their prayers called upon Orpheus, together with the Samothracian Deities, that they would deliver them from this eminent danger. When the Myia were in the belly of all the danger, expecting no good issue, unless they were brought forth of it, a two-fold light of Castor and Pollux shined about their heads (as it is said) and not long after the Sea began to be more calme, and for this cause the Divinity of these two young men was esteemed very highly of; and those subitaneous Castorean fires that blazed in the Sea, were called Gemini, and they glittered like as they were the pictures and effigies of Joves twy-forked lightning which sometimes did sit upon the point of the hairs of the Souldiers, that were in their night-watches, at other times upon the fore-Masts of Ships, and wandred up and down other parts of the Ship, and with an audible sound were wont to go about. But they were a bad sign and a sad omen, when they came solitary and alone, as signifying the drowning of Ships; but when they two came together, they were a happy sign: No sign in the Zodiack more fortunate then Gemini, and were fore-shewers of a happy voyage: but it is said that by the same argument they are believed to fly and depart when Helen comes, which is a threatening and ominous symptome; this thing in that place was reputed a miracle, and therefore Castor and Pollux were religiously worshipped by the Mariners, and so the people being arrived safely at their port, for their safe deliverance did solemnize their rites, and Ceremonies unto the Samothracian gods. Sabel. lib. 5. Enead. 1.

21.

M*arcus Tullius* relates in his first book of Tusculane Questions, that Trophonius and Agamedes, building a Temple unto Apollo and worshipping that god, did require a reward of their labour nothing that was certain, but that which should be best for Man. Unto whom Apollo about three dayes after did shew that he would give them that which they desired, who as soon as he began to shine (for by Apollo is meant the Sun) they were found both dead in the morning.

22.

C*resus* the King of the Lydians being overcome by Cyrus, and put upon a Funeral pile, that he might be burned, with a loud voice called thrice upon Solon; and Cyrus, understanding the cause of it, commanded the fire to be extinguished, but a little while after when the fire prevailed much against him, and waxed very fervent, he invocated and called upon Apollo, that if ever there were a gratefull sacrifice or offering to be given by him, that he would free him from the present evil; on a sudden therefore black black pitchy Clouds overspread as it were with a black veil, the fair and serene face of the Heavens, and bucketted down whole carac-racks of liquid showers, and so put out and quenched the fire. Herodotus, lib. 1.

Xerxes bringing a great Navy against the Greeks at the end and extremity of the Magnesian Land, the Athenians are reported to have called upon the North-wind, they received of an Oracle which they had, that they should invoke and call upon his son in law, to help them, for Boreas had Orythia Attica the daughter of Erechtheus the King. Therefore whilst they laid siege in Chalcide they invoked Boreas and Orythia, that they would help them, and destroy the Ships of the Barbarous, even as they had done before about Athos: and Boreas performing the same, they went thence, and extructed to him a Grove near the River Ilissus. But in that Shipwrack, they that speak of the fewest, say not fewer then forty ships were cast away and sunk of Xerxes Navy; and an innumerable company of men lost, and a great treasure of Money spent, besides divers ladened or Merchandizing Ships, and Barks, and Fisher-boats. Herodotus, lib. 7.

23.

In a Vulcanian hillock hard by Agrigentum, there are certain green logs and pieces of wood, which being put upon the Altar, if their prayers be just and righteous, of their own accord they will kindle and catch fire; but if their requests be unjust and unreasonable, there will be no sign of combustion or burning. *Fulg.
 lib. 1. cap. 6.*

24.

Romulus in the Sabines War which was transacted about the Capitoll, and the Pallace, and high Tower, when he could in no wise stay the shamefull flight of his Souldiers in that skirmish he did vow to dedicate a Temple unto Jupiter Stator, the Stayer; if he would take away that aguish fear from the people that were about to fly, and would but stay the Romans against their enemies the Sabeans; and that they that stayed behind, should be the Victors: scarce had he said his prayers, ere he obtained his request for the wings of the Army being repaired, the battel did not onely hang in Aequilibrio, but the Sabines were repelled (who a while before exulted for their Victory) even unto Curtius's Lake, and was beat back with great detriment and slaughter. *Sabellicus, lib. 2. cap. 5.
 ex Plutarchi Romulo.*

25.

What shall I say of Numa Pompilius? (who succeeded Romulus being called into the Kingdome out of the Sabine Courts) how prevalent was his prayer, and how daring and bold which was ready to allure Jupiter out of heaven. A thing (of which there is sufficient witness) not onely believed, but attempted of others likewise. Tullus Hostilius, who after him was possessed of the Kingdome, who did not undergo nor perform the sacred rites wisely when his whole house was set on fire, and burned by lightning. Sabel. lib. 2. cap. 5.

26.

27.

Tullus Hostilius when he had Marshall'd and order'd his army to march towards the River of Tibris and Aniens, and in the Fidenates and Pejentians; and knowing the imbecillity and want of strength of the Albanes against their enemies, he vow'd to sacrifice twelve Samians to Mars, and so quickly became the Victor or over-comer of the Army, who now was so accounted by right of Victory, and also was grown by hope and strength unequally match't to his enemies. Ibidem.

28.

A Greater counterfeiting and Apeing of piety (but yet who should reckon the worshipping of Heathen gods and spirits piety?) may be seen in Tucia, and appeared most eminently in a Vestall there. Whether the confidence of the woman in this Case, or the obedience of the evil spirits is greater, is a great doubt; being commanded to plead her own cause, and to vindicate and clear her self from her aspersions, which was put upon her by her accuser, and the Vestall was desired that if she had all her time carried and demeaned her self chastly, and piously in her Ceremonies, that she should hold and fix her self with her anchora spei, upon the Rock of confidence; so she made her requests to her gods, and going to a bank of a River, having many accompanying her, that they might know the event and exit of the businesse, she brought a sieve full of the Water of the River to the High Priest (before whom her cause was formerly pleaded. There is also added to this miracle, that her accuser being very narrowly sought after, never appeared more. Ibidem.

29.

THere was a like miracle manifested about Claudius, that was the worshipper or Idolizer of the same Ceremony, and when her too too loose life had contracted some calumny, who did endeavour to wash off the blot, and to dispell that cloud that encurtain'd her glory, and to blow away that fume of opinion that was in the minds of most men, did attempt to remedy this malady by some such apparent testimony which would require more admiration of the succeeding Ages to wonder at it, then faith to believe it: this Vestall (Virgin shall I call her?) first humbly praying, and tying her belt, quickly removed a Ship which carried Juno, sticking in the Tiberine sands, and drew it against the stream, which a great deal of the Roman strength and force (though vis et armis) after very many encounters could not stir nor remove. Sabellius, Lib. 2. cap. 5.

Adrian the Emperour, Lucius Commodus being adopted, and hoping for the Empire, commanded Severianus, and Favus his Nephew (which seemed to take the surrender of the Empire grievously) to be slain, much suspecting and envying them; one of them being four score and ten years old, the other but eighteen. But Severianus before he was to be strangled, called for some fire, and, burning incense; he said, Vos, & Dei, testor me nihil mali commisisse; i. e. Be ye my witnesses, O ye gods, that I have done no evil to Adrian, I wish onely this mischief, that when he shall desire to dye, he shall not be able. And thus one of them yielded to the fates. Afterwards Adrian, in a great sicknesse, often desired death in vain, and often strived to be his own executioner (by reason of his wicked heyre); his Epistle which intimates this is extant, for he writes thus; How miserable a thing is it to desire death, and not to dye. Dion. Cassius, in Vita Adriani.

30.

Vhen the Athenians were infected with the Plague, they had an Oracle from Pythia, that the City was to be purged by sacrifice: they sent Niscas the Son of Niceratus, to a ship, who called Epimenedes out of Creet. He proceeding after this sort, Olymp. 27. did purge the City thus: they took sheep that had black and white fleeces, and brought them into Areopagus, and from thence permitted them to go whither they listed, and appointed severall to accompany them, and that wheresoever they should lye down, they should sacrifice severall of them to peculiar gods. And so the pestilence was quenched, hence was it that Altars were oft found in the Athenian Villages without any name. Which by chance was to the unknown God, upon which occasion, Saint Paul began to Preach Christ to the Athenians. Laertius.

31.

The Persians being overcome and beat back to Platea a City in Boetia. Apollo answered the Grecians (consulting about a sacrifice) that they should rear up an Altar to Jupiter the Liberator and freer, but before they had solemnized the ceremonies, they appointed that all fire should be extinguished through the whole Region which was polluted by the Barbarians, and that they should kindle all their fires out of that pure fire on the common hearth at Delphos. Therefore by and by the Magistrates of the Grecians going all about, commanded all them that used any fire to extinguish it. Euchidas of the Plataeans, promised that as swiftly as that could be done, that he would bring fire from the goddesse, and so he went to Delphos, and so purging his body by sacrifice, and washing it with water, being Crowned with Laurell, took fire from the Altar, and running backwards, went towards Plateas, and before the setting of the Sun, returned, and in that very same day measured and travelled a thousand paces, so the Citizens were saved, unto whom he delivered the fire, but he quickly fainted fainted, and a while after died: the Plutænsians did bury him in the Temple dedicated to Diana at Eucليا, and did superscribe this Tetrameter Verse.

32.

Euchidas Delphos cucurrit, et die reversus uno est.

Euchidas unto Delphos one day run, Return'd again ere the setting of the Sun. Plutarchus, in Aristide.

33. IT is reported that Hercules the son of Alcmena, offering sacrifice to Jupiter in Olympia, when he could not drive away the flies, it is said that the Elisi called the driver away of them ἀνοίοντες, and did do sacrifice to him, and when the sacrifice was offered, on a sudden all the flies flew beyond the River Alpheus. Therefore was it reserved and kept by the Eleans to drive away flies from Olympia, and the same ceremony was used. Pausanias, lib. 5.
34. Aurelian the Emperour, when he came against the Marcomannians unto Mediolanum a Town in Italy, he writ to the Senate that they should look into the Sybillean books, what rites were necessary to crave the help of their gods. Which when the Senate had done so, and had it revealed by a divine revelation more then by any humane strength or counsels, the Barbarians durst not go beyond their prefixed limits, affrighted by such terrible sights and Wonders, and so a clear path was laid open for Aurelians Victory. But he, least that he might not seem ungratefull not to acknowledge his help from Heaven besides the great rewards of this Victory, and Thank-giving being given through the whole City of Rome, he gave fifteen Millions of the weight of Gold, and a great treasure of Pearls, for a remembrance thereof. Fulgosius, lib. 1. cap. 1.
35. THe Persians commanding Asia when they had spoiled and ransack't all the Holy places and Temples of the Greeks excepting the Temple of Semidea Rhea which was in Castamus Cherronesus, neither fortified with Walls nor Watches, and left it unviolated, the plundering Robbers pilling and poling all places, and this was that place which was onely left unwall'd, and that might of all other been taken without danger, they report the cause to be this; the universall beneficence towards all men, for she did teach and instruct the sick in Dreams, the cure of their diseases, and did recover very many that were desperately sick. Furthermore, those Women that were in Travell, she delivered them from the perill of Child-birth. Diodorus, lib. 5. cap. 17.

Vithout Crotonis anciently there was a Temple dedicated to Juno Licinia and was very strict and hallowed with many Religious ceremonies, and where was a Grove that was hedged about with high Firre-Trees; in the Center and middle thereof there was a feeding place, a grasse-plot where all kind of Cattle was fed, which was sacrificed to the goddesse, and had no keeper, the flocks overnight would steare themselves of their own accord to their Stables, being no wayes lyable either to the injury of men or beasts, there was a great wonder and miracle related of an Altar there which was in the day time, never was there any ashes blown away by the violence of the Winds. Sabellius, lib. 3. Ennead. 5.

36.

A Great barrenesse comming upon the grounds of Pelagum, they devoted the spring to their gods, being able to perform their vovves, they neglected to perform it, therefore being exagitated and vexed with a grievous pestilence, and enquiring of their Oracle, the cause of that evill, the Oracle answered, δὲ τι χόρτις ὃν ἐβόλοιο ἐκ ἀπίδοις ἂν ἦν ἔατο, that having whatsoever they would, they have not given that which they promised, therefore to pacify the Deity, they were to pay the tēths. Dionys. Halicar. lib. 4. Euseb. lib. 4. preparat. Evangelicæ.

37.

They report that in Italy the Rock of the Pasidoniacorians there was such a miracle used: for there was a hunter in that Countrey which is called Andragathia; he was wont to dedicate the heads and feet of those things, which he had killed to Diana, and affix them to the Trees, and when he had taken a great Boar in contempt of the goddesse, he said, he would onely offer the head of it to her, and tying it to a certain Tree, one day when he turned a little out of the way, to shroud himself from the heat of the Sun being then Noon-tide, he slept under that tree, under which he had tyed the head of it, and fell asleep; then did the garter dissolve and untye of ir self, and the head of the Boar fell upon his head so that he dyed. Diodorus, lib. 4. cap. 3.

38.

O*Eneus* the King of Calydonia, there being a great plenty of all Kind of grain in Oetolia, and when he had sacrificed to other gods, onely Diana excepted, the goddesse being angry, sent a Calydonian Boor of a great bignesse, to destroy the neighbouring Region thereabout: and Meleager to stay this, being in full strength, taking many consorts with her, killed the Boar, and so by the consent of all, she obtained the reward of the slain beast, that was, the skin of the Boor. And when in a hunting time he was with Atalanta, the daughter of Schaneis, being much enamoured of her, did concede and grant to her that skin, which was his reward for killing that wild beast. Which being done, and Thestes sons being Hunters together with him, taking it very ill to prefer a stranger Woman 39.

Woman before them, and disapproving Meleagrus's fact, they by their traps and ambushes, took the skin from Atalanta, when she should return into Arcadia; then Meleager, as well agitated by love, as exagitated and excited by ignominy, at first he admonished those robbers that they should restore the reward of Virtue which was given to that Woman by him, but they, contemning his words, he slew them all, for they were the Brethren of Althea: but she being much grieved for their slaughter, execrated and cursed Meleager, and beg'd of the immortal gods, who had heard her prayers, that they would put an end to the life of her Son: some say that in Meleagers birth, the destinies appeared to Althea in a dream by night, and said, then should the life of her Son Meleager be expired, when that wood (which was a quenched charcolled firebrand) was burned out: the child being born, Althea thinking that by saving that Wood, she should also save the life of her Child, she diligently reserved and kept it. Afterwards being grievously tormented, and vexed by the death of her Brethren, she burned the firebrand, and then the cause of her sons death came to light, and repenting her of the fact, she hanged her self. Diodorus, lib. 4. cap. 2.

40.

Stymphalus a River in Arcadia, maketh a great Lake or Gulph, and percollating, and being filtered through the Veins of the Earth, insinuates it self at length into the Argolick field, and there its name is changed; for Stymphalus 'tis called Erasinus in the dayes of Pausanias: this miracle happened, when a solemn rite was very cursorily performed by the Arcadians to the Stymphalian Diana; and in the first place the rites, for their countrey being Pretermitted, incontinently the Grove fell upon that cavern, under which the River Stymphalus did drain and sweat through the Earth's pores, therefore the mouth of the passage (by reason of the intervening rubbish) being dam'd up, and the water making a reflux and flowing retrogradely, the water did spread and expand it self over all the adjacent fields no lesse then 400. paces, and made a great pool or Gulph. And so by chance it happened that a hunter chasing his Hart, when she had stuck her self in the dirt of the fen, being chased with grief of mind, swam through the water, and he had not left off the pursuit after her, ere a great chasma or Gulph both swallowed up him and the wild beast together (they report) that by and by the standing water finding the channel of the River, and following it, so that the whole Lake was drunk and dried up in one day, the ceremony being more preparedly and magnificently made to Diana. Pausanias in Arcadiis.

41.

Laucus the son of Sisyphus, who ruled at Potnia despising Venus's Rites, was torn in pieces by his Mares, which used to draw his Chariot. Servius, lib. 3. Georg.

Hercules

Hercules did erect a magnificent Temple to Iolaus his Nephew, and instituted many hallowed rites to be consecrated in it, and if the inhabitants should be wanting at the accustomed ceremonies they quickly began to be made dumb, but when again they should obey, they were to be restored to their former soundnesse. Alexandr. ab Alexandro lib. 2. cap. 14.

42.

Cranippus Syracusanus because he had neglected to sacrifice unto Bacchus; the god, being angered and provoked, made him run into such drunkenesse, that meeting his daughter Cyane in the dark, although she resisted, he deflowered her. But she snatching a ring from her father that did obdurate her, delivered it to her Nurse, that it might be for a mark and sign of him that violated her. But afterwards when a grievous pestilence did invade and come upon the City, for such a hainous perpetrated wickednesse, there was an Oracle given out by Pythias, that the Authour of that impiety should be sacrificed to the freeing and liberating gods. Therefore Cyane being conscious of these things, slew her father, haling him to the Altar by the hair of the head, that the gods might be pacified. Dositheus, lib. 3. rerum Sicularum: et Plutarchus, cap. 39. Paral.

43.

IN Phocis at the Tithorean Temple of Isis, for Religion, the holiest of all them that ever the Grecians consecrated to the Egyptian goddesse, for neither is there any inward accesse into it by any, but to those whom Isis in dreams seems to call to her, beloved afore the rest: to this Tithorean Isis are two Fairs yearly celebrated in the Spring and in Autumn, the Merchants or Factors build them up Shops and Stalls of Reeds, and of any other matter that they can light on. At the last on the third day they that come to Merchandize there, buy slaves, but in the afternoons apply their minds to their devotions. They sacrifice sumptuous Oxen, and Hares, but Geese and Meleagrides, birds, more parcimoniously, &c. Sometimes they say, a man is prophane when the pile begins to be burned, that through curiosity and self-confidence dare go into it. And to him if there shall seem all places filled full of Hobgoblins, and such domesticall homely spirits, notwithstanding if he turn back to Tithorea, and relate all that which he hath seen, he quickly dieth. Pausanias in Phocicis.

44.

IT is found by experience that they who violate the Religion of the Cabirorians, the Thebanes cannot escape condign punishment for their unexpiable wickednesse; for when the Naupacti a prophane Generation of men, durst usurp those things that were consecrated by the Thebanes, not long after they paid for their fraudulent impiety. Also those Persians of Xerxes Army, when Mardonius was their Captain, having their fixed station or standing Camp in Beotia, one part of which not doubting to enter into the Temple of the Cabirorians, whether drawn thither by the desire of a great prey, or out of the contempt of the Deity, all of them were stricken with madnesse; part of them cast themselves into the Sea, part of them precipitated themselves from high rocks: and when Alexander in a battell had overcome the Thebanes, and did destroy and depopulate the City and fields with fire and Sword, those of the Macedonians that broke into the sacred Temple of the Cabirorians all of them either by lightnings or by fire sent from Heaven, were slain; Such was the Religion of that Temple from the beginning. Pausanias in Bæoticis.

45.

46. Pentheus the King of the Thebanes when he had grieved Liber his father, and reviled him with many contumelious terms and other things, he did very insolently, but at last that he might pry into those hidden sacrifices of Women, went to Cytheron, and climbed into a Tree, and from thence he saw all, which when the mad Priestesses of Bacchus saw with a great violence, they tore him being alive, in pieces, and pull'd limb from limb. They say, there was an Oracle given at Corinthus, that they should make inquisition for, and seek out that Tree, and the finders out thereof should be worshipped with divine honours, therefore by the Item or inkling given by that Oracle, there was two wooden pictures found of his Father, Liber, put in the repository of the Temple: besides two mouthes which were anointed with red lead, they name the other Lyfius Bacchus. Pausanias in Corinthiacis: Euripides writing of the daughters of Bacchus Cadmus, and their sisters the Simeles which brought up Dionysius, did mention one Pentheus, that each of them tugg'd away the parts of his body. Natales Comes Mythol. lib. 5. cap. 13.

47. Vhen the Potitians had obtained the rites of the consecrated things of Bacchus, which was assigned for a gift to their nation by him, as an heritage, Appius Claudius the Censor being the Author of it, did transfer it to the servilest basest office of their servants: therefore all that were above thirty years of age, Adulti, were slain and destroyed, and the name of the Potitians, divided into twelve Families, quickly was quite extinct. And Appius for his part was made blind. Valerius, lib. 1. cap. 2. Livius, lib. 2. Decad. 3.

48. C. Terentius Varro overseer for the Temples, when he made Circus plays in the Temple of Jupiter, he put a boy of admirable beauty, a player, to keep the watches. Which being done after many years it was as well expiated, as remembered: for a great while after, being made Consull, fighting at Cannus, he prospered so ill, that he almost lost fifty thousand Romans that were slain. Valer. Max. lib. 1. cap. 2.

Annibal and Himilco being two Carthagenian Captains, besieging Agrigentum, commanded their Souldiers that they should cast and throw down all the Sepulchres and Monuments, and so by that ruine draw and contract a great heap of rubbish and to bring it to the Walls; neither was the Army slow to execute this command, nor to bring this work to passe: but whilest they were digging there, a great reverence of Religion and awe of the gods began to seize on some of the minds of the Army. For the Tomb and Sepulchre of Thero, a Monument of great labour and labour and Art, shaken by lightning, trembled: which miracle being procured for some of their Priests, when they saw the multitude make haste to pull it down, laboured with all might and main, to stay and forbid it; and suddenly a pestilence invaded the Camp, which destroyed many, neither did it wrest a few into divers afflictions and calamities in which Annibal the Captain himself dyed. As also those that did watch by night, did think they saw spectrums and ghosts, and the shadows of them that were dead walking and wandring in shades. And Himilco gave over spoiling of the Monuments, and quickly performed his Rites to his gods, sacrificed an Infant to Saturn, and drowned a whole company of Priests to appease Neptune. Diod. lib. 13.

Iulus when he saw Minervaes Temple on fire, running in haste, took up Pallas's Image which fell from Heaven, and instantly he was struck blind. A while after the wrath of the Goddess being appeased, he recovered his sight again. Plutar. cap. 34. Paral.

Pegasus bearing the Images of Dionysius out of Eleuthera a City in Boetia into Athens, the Athenians did neglect their god, neither did they receive him (as the custome was) with pomp. Wherefore their god was angry, and infected the privy members of the men with a grievous disease. And enquiring of the Oracle by what means they might be freed from this punishment, had this answer, that they should receive their god with pomp and honour. And so from this they carried through the whole solemnities, piles adorned with green leaves, as well publickly as privately. Natales Comes, lib. 5. cap. 13.

The Captains of the Japigans did take out the Images of the gods out of the Temples, who boastingly said it was fit that they should give place to those that are most potent. And because of that, they were smote with darts and fire from heaven. And there did appear Darts afar off, which were shot out of the Clouds. And all their children unto this day are shaven unto the skin, and wear long mourning Gowns, and are to all, more rare then good men. Athenæum, lib. 12. cap. 7.

53.

Vhen the Aeginete invaded the Epidaurians, and carried away the Olive-tree Images of Damia and Auxesia, by reason of which the Epidaurians yearly were constrained to bear the rites to Ereikhem at Athens (for by that law they had granted the Epidaurians power of their Olive-trees) the Epidaurians refused to let go their bargain; Therefore the Athenians sent a Cart into Agina to fetch back the Statues, that they might bring the Images as though they had been made of their wood, therefore they endeavoured with might and main, and ropes cast about, to draw the Statues into their Ships. But as they drew them, the Images fell on their knees, and from that time they alwaies remained in that posture. Moreover, when there was a great Thunder and Earthquake, the Rowers were made mad, and wounded one another grievously, and slew all, save one that was the Messenger of this slaughter, who betook himself to Phalerum. Herodotus, Libro 5.

54.

Artabarus a Persian, the son of Pharnax who had a comission from Mardonius, for the Circuit of 60. miles, when he rushed into Neptunes Temple, and wickedly and irreligiously upon his Image, in the siege of the City he was much troubled with the flux of the Sea, and being constrained to raise his siege, when he with his Army retreated into Pallenes, he lost a great part of it by the overflowing Tides of the Sea. Herodotus, lib. 8.

55.

Pub. Scipio Africanus Minor, when he had granted leave to his Souldiers to take Carthage, a certain Souldier going into the Temple of Apollo, did attempt to bereave the Image of the Golden Vestment: for which thing Apollo being angry, caused that those sacrilegious hands should be found cut off, among those fragments of the Clothes and the skirts of the Trunk or body of the Image. Valer. Max. lib. 1, cap. 2.

56.

THe Grecians convented and met together in Aulis being to sail to Troy. Agamemnon going a pretty way from the Army, seeing a she-Goat about Dianaes Grove (ignorant of Religion) which was in that place, smote it with a Dart, nor long after Diana being angry, sent the Pestilence into his Army, a certain Religious Woman affirmed that Diana was vexed for the death of her she-Goat, in which she much delighted, and that she would have punishment of the Army for such a sacrilegious fact, and that she could not be appeased before he that was the Authour of this wickednesse, did sacrifice his eldest daughter, &c. Dionysius, lib. 1.

Panrates Arcadium, in inscriptis Marinis operibus, declares the fish Pompilus, called also Nautillus, is not onely in esteem with Nepitune, but with all the gods in Samothrace. When the Golden kind of men as yet lived, Epopæus, of the Scarian Island, fishing together with his son, and seeing that he could catch no other fish but Pompills, he did not refrain from eating them, but he with his son did eat them all. But shortly after he suffered for his villany. For a Whale coming to the Ship, swallowed up Epopæus in the sight of his son. Moreover Panrates doth relate, that the Pompilus is an enemy to the Dolphin, and that they let the Mechi go Scot-free when they have eaten a Pompill, for they become unprofitable; and being troubled after they have eaten them, the water casteth them on the shore, where they are food for Cormorants and Gnats. Atheneus, lib. 7. cap. 7.

57.

They say that a certain man hid a piece of holy Money which he stole out of the Temple of Apollo at Delphos, in that part of Parnassus, which is shadowed most with Woods and Trees. But a Wolf violently killed him sleeping, and afterwards every day, he did make the City resound with his howlings. When the men of Delphos began to think that it could not be done without some divine providence, following the beast, they found the Gold which was taken away by sacrilege, and for the memory of the thing, they dedicated a Brazen Wolf to Apollo. Pausanias, lib. 10.

58.

Sambicus a certain man of Eleus (a City of Thrace) together with some other of his companions, threw down many Brazen Statues, and sold them. Afterwards attempting greater things, he spoiled the Temple of Diana their Guardian. For her Temple was in Elia (a City of Achaia) which they called the Temple of Aristarchus. But he being apprehended presently after, when he refused to betray his companions, he was torn with new devised torments, amongst which he lost his life. Plutarch. in problemat. Græc.

59.

Philomelus, who first possessed the Temple of Apollo at Phocis restrained his hand from the holy things, which necessity did permit him to take. But Onomarchus which succeeded him, spent much of the Money in War. Phyllas the third, the brother of Onomarchus, took away a great number of the gifts which were consecrated in the Temple; to coyn Money, to pay his hired soldiers. And truly having received 120. Golden bucklers dedicated by Cæsar King of the Lydians, which weighed two Talents, he cast them aside to make money, and likewise three hundred and sixty Golden Cups, which weighed twenty pounds, and the Golden Images of a Lion and a woman, so that all those things were valued at thirty Talents of Gold, and all those things which were coyned 60.

of

of the Gold, according to the account of Silver, did amount to four thousand Talents. But all the Captains did spend the summe of above six thousand Talents out of silver things, which were consecrated as well by Cræsus, as others; that if the whole value of the Gold and silver were accounted, it would amount to more then 10000. Talents. But all these were heavily punished for their impiety and contempt of the Deity. For Philomelus fighting against the Bæotians, the revengers of sacrilege, being wounded in many places, was shut into a certain steep place, whence he could not easily get out (a punishment which sometimes was wont to be inflicted on Captives); he being afraid, cast himself headlong thence, and in the same manner, paying a due punishment to the Deity, he died. Diodorus, lib. 16. Onomarchus having his Army vanquished by Philip the son of Amyntas, swimming to the ships which were bound for the Athenian shore, died in the Sea. Phyllus was consumed with a perpetuall contagion. But Phalecu which after all them took away whatsoever was left of the gifts, lived long enough in fear, and divers great dangers, not that his fortune might be thereby better then the other companions of the wicked mischief, but that being tormented for a longer time, and made more known to many by his misery, he might undergo a more famous and much mentioned calamity. Being tossed about with very much wandering, when he did resist Cidonia in Crete, he was stricken dead by thunder.

61. Q Fulvius Flaccus did not escape unpunished, because he carried the Marble tiles that were to mend the Temple of Juno at Lacanium, to the Temple of warlike fortune, which he made at Rome. For it is affirmed that after this deed he was not long in his wits, but also yielded up the Ghost, by very great grief of mind when he heard that one of his two sons (which were waging war in Illiricum) was dead, and the other dangerously sick. By whose fall the Senate being moved, took care that the Tyles should be carried back to Locrum (a City in the uttermost part of Italy which was named Magna Græcia.) Valerius, lib. 1. cap. 2. & Livius, lib. 42.

62. When the Persians, under the conduct of Xerxes, came to the most famous Temple at Delphos with an intent to spoil it, great miraculous things were presented to their sight. The evill Dæmons (whose habitation without doubt the same was) never saw a greater prey of men offered to them, then with that Tempest, they could appoint the same new superstition to Xerxes, and the whole World which he took with him. Two Rocks being suddenly smote down from the top of Parnassus, tumbled down upon the enemies lying under, and broke in pieces many that resisted. Moreover lightning being cast down from the Heavens with Thunder, and the holy armes moved out of the inner part of the house of their own accord, and a braying heard in the next Temple of provident Minerva, nerua, did overthrow the Barbarians suddenly, so that they cast themselves headlong down from the steep places of the Mountains, as if they were driven with madnesse, upon whom the men of Delphos casting stones and Darts made a great slaughter. And by these various Phantasms, the Temple remained unviolated. Trogus saith, that the men of Delphos found four thousand men, whose whole hands were consumed by lightning, and the filthy tempest, and at length they proclaimed openly, that by how much the greater the offense of the gods was than the offense of men, by so much; they ought to use more sudden and grievous punishment. Diodor. lib. 11.

WHen Theron King of the hither Spain, was driven with rage to abolish the Temple of Hercules, which is at the Gades, (two Isles at the further end of Spain beyond Granate) having furnished his army of Ships with necessaries, the men of the Isles of Gades came against them, being carried in swift Ships, and battel being given, it was weighed in an equall ballance as yet, but on a sudden the Kings Ships were put to flight, and therewith being caught with an unexpected fire; they burned. Very few of the enemies which remained being taken, did declare, that Lions did appear to them standing on the Decks of the Ships of the Gades, and suddenly their Ships were burned with beams sent in, such as are painted on the head of the Sun. Macrobius. lib. 1. cap. 20.

63.

VVHen the Scythians having gone out of their bounds, had spoyled the Temple of Venus Urania in Ascalon a City of Palestine (for it was a very ancient Temple) the goddesse smote them and their Children with an effeminate disease, which they whom the Scythians call Enareas, can onely cure. Having enjoyed the Empire of Asia 28. years, at length being taken to a Banquet by Cyaxares King of the Medes, they were murdered, when they were merry in their Cups, as it was agreed upon before. Herodotus, lib. 1.

64.

Alexander, the son of Phillip of Macedon, when he had overthrown Miletum the best fenced City of Ionia, his pillaging Souldiers thronged into the Temple of Ceres. But Milesian Ceres revenging the fact, did cast flames of fire, which did strike the robbers blind. Valerius, lib. 1. cap. 2.

65.

WHen Pyrhus King of the Epirots returning out of Sicily, passed by the people of Locrus, he spoiled the Temple of Proserpina notable for much Religion among the inhabitants of Locrus, saying in derision: Unseasonable devotion is superstition, and to gather Riches together without labour is wisdom. But the day after that he had committed that sacriledg, his Navy being tossed with an ugly tempest, all the Ships which had the holy Money, were driven to the 66.

the shore of Italy. With which misfortune being affrighted, he commanded that the Money should be sought out, and laid up again amongst the ancient treasures of the goddesse. Neither had he any good fortune afterwards. For being tossed with many mischances, at length entring into Argos, he died miserably. Sudas & Livius, lib. 9. secundi belli Punici.

67.

Vhen Himilco Prince of Carthage (having brought almost all Sicily under his subjection) besieged Syracusa, he spoiled all the Temples, but in the first place, the Temple of Ceres and Proserpina. And while he studied how to gird his Camp, and encompass his Tents with a wall, he demolished all the Sepulchres almost at the next Work to build his Wall, amongst which he spoiled the Monuments of Gelon of Demareta and his Wife, anciently builded with wonderfull work. But in a short time after he suffered deserved punishment for his sacrilege and impiety so arrogantly committed against the gods. For shortly his affairs went to wrack, all things being begun to be made worse, and afterwards when courage increased by little and little in Dionysians, and he was accustomed to weary them with often sallying out, and fight with light eruptions, they alwayes returned Conquerours at all skirmishes. Also vain tumults among the Souldiers and sudden terrours were often stirred up in the silence of Midnight throughout the Camp, by which they did run to Arms in vain, the cause of it no man knowing, and their Tents being turned upside down with earthquakes, afterwards they perceived their enemies to break out of a bulwark upon them. A pestilence invaded the Camp of the besiegers in the Moor with a burning heat, which consumed the number of 150000. Dionysius making use of that occasion, set fire on his Navy, and drove them to such extremity, that he compelled the Tyrant to buy a safe return for him and the Carthaginians with a reward of three hundred Talents, having left and betrayed his companions. Being returned into his Countrey, he did lead a life exposed to the reproach of all, and was so miserable, that he went about the Temples of the City in a very thin Coat, declaring his impiety, and exhibiting his punishment to the Deity, having confessed his wickednesse against the Gods. Lastly despairing, he killed himself willfully, leaving a great fear to the Citizens of violating Religion. Diodem, lib. 14.

68.

When Delos was heretofore the chief Emporium of all Greece and that onely fenced with Religion, it defended all the inhabitants from the injuries of all others. But Menophantes a certain Commander of the Armies of Mithridates, who being driven by the command of the King, or his own insolence, arose against the Island, and invaded it with his Navy, having neither the defence of Walls, nor Arms. Where all things being beaten down, taken away, and pillaged, at length he laid the very City even with with the ground. In that destruction he cast the Image of Apollo (proudly being taken from its seat) into the Sea: That, being brought by the raging of the Sea to the bounds of the Bœotians at Laconia, named the place Epidelium. But neither Menophantes, nor Mithridates himself did escape the wrath of the god. For not long after the calamity of Delos, when he was carried into the Sea, the Merchants which had escaped his hand, flew Menophantes. But the god compelled Mithridates to lose his courage, having lost his Kingdome already, and being driven to and fro by the Romans, he could rest no where. There are some which say that he begged, as a great favour, from one of the Mercenary Barbarians, to be killed. Pausanias, in Laconicis.

When the Grecians had dragged out by force, and killed those who came to pray in the Temple of Neptune, in the City of Helires, a great and sudden Earthquake did not onely overturn the very walls, but also delaced the very foundation of the City, that there was not so much as any tokens left, whereby it might be known to future ages. And they record that another such destruction happened. Helires was encompassed with a deluge of the Sea in the winter season, and the very Grove of Neptune was so overwhelmed with that inundation, that the tops of the highest Trees could hardly be discovered: which coming to passe, the whole City with its inhabitants was suddenly destroyed as well by the most violent motion of the Earth, as the most abundant over-running rage of the Sea. In the fourth year of the Olympiad, 191. Pausanias, in Achaicis.

69.

When the Lacedemonians were iraged against the Inhabitants of Iota, which worshipped at the Temple of Neptune Asphalius (that is) the safe, as Suidas saith, (which is at Teneros): Sparta was shaken as well with vehement as frequent impulsions of the Earth, that not one house escaped ruine, except four houses amongst all the rest which escaped unruined. Pausanias, in Achaicis: et Ælianus, Libro 6. varie Historie.

70.

When Cytharodes did dispute in contending for the honour of Juno at Sybarum, for that was the cause that provoked the Sybarians to that contentious disputation, and when they had mutually gone to arms, Cytharodes fled with his Stole to the Altar of Juno: but they forbore not to lay violent hands upon him in that place, but a little after they saw blood sprinkled about the Temple, as if it had issued out of a continually-flowing Fountain. But when the Sabaritans had sent to ask counsell at the Oracle of Delphos, they received this answer:

71.

Stand off, my Sacred Tables come not near whose hands are drench'd in blood, should Justice fear, which fresh distilling, thus forbids to draw,
 Into the Altresbold of my Temple & enter,
 Good faies to them can never be foretold, who so stain Janocu Temple dare be bold,
 The Mules harmlesse servant thou hast slain,
 The god's revenge for which, thou art sustain,
 who perpetrates base willfull facts, may know,
 He's sure to suffer heavy Judgements blow,
 Inexorable toth' unjust immortalls prove,
 Descended though by birth from mighty Jove, who on their necks, and children's childrens dew, Justly will heaped vengeance send to be,

Neither was revenge delayed. For when they waged Warre with the inhabitants of Cronia, they were overcome by them, and their City was overthrowne. Eliaen, lib. 1. de var.

72. IN the Mountain Halefny near Alumina, was the Temple of Warlike Neptune, built by Trophonias and Agamedes, with Oak-en boards, forbidding entrance not by the opposition of any bolt, but onely with a small Wollen rope drawn before it, which had a secret force to drive men away. Never any one entered into this Temple, besides Epytus King of Arcadia, who having lost his Son as soon as he entered into the Temple, he was smitten blind by the sudden force of the Sea-water, boyling out of holy fountains, and not long after died. When the Emperor Adrianus did build it up again, he did set overseers amongst the workmen, lest any one should look into the ancient Altar, or suffer any rubbel to be carried from it to any other place. Pausanias, in Arcadi-

73. IN the Mountain Lycam of Arcadia was the Altar of Jupiter Ly- cam, whither no man could come. If any one entred despising the Religion of the place, it was certainly requir'd that he must dye within the space of that year. It is a wonderfull thing also that (as they say) as well men as beasts, which by chance come into the circuit of this place, have no shadow of their bodies. And truly a Hunter cannot follow wild beasts that fly thither, but standing at the entrance, he cannot perceive any shadow that they have. It is certain that the men of Syracusa City of Sicilia, do shew no shadows from their bodies at that time of the year, when Cancer is in Conjunction with the Sun. But in this Lycam it doth happen in any part of the year. Pausanias, in Arcadicis.

They report that in Cerynea a City of Achaia, was the Temple of the Eumenides, dedicated by Orestes. They believed that if any one entred in hither to see it, polluted either with slaughter, or any incest, or kind of impiety, he being troubled in mind, would presently be cruelly terrified. Wherefore the entrance of the Temple was forbidden to all that strived otherwise. Pausanias, in Arcadicis.

74.

When Erisichthon a certain Theſſalonian had cut down the Grove of Ceres, ſhe ſent to him perpetuall hunger, and cauſed that he ſhould never be ſatiſfied with meat. He had a daughter named Meſſra, very well ſkilled in Witch-craft, whom he often ſold, being turned into divers forms of living Creatures, which running away a little after, would return to her father having taken her former ſhape, and ſo ſhe helped her fathers hunger according to her ability. Laſtly, he was driven to ſo great hunger, that he eat his own fleſh. Natales Comes, Mythol. libro 5. cap. 14.

75.

When Cambyſes King of the Persians, came to the Theban Egyptians, he ſent fifty thouſand to deſtroy the Ammonians, and commanded that they ſhould burn the Oracle of Jupiter Ammon. Therefore when they had gone ſeven dayes on their journey along the ſands, and dined between the City Oaſis and the Ammonians; a ſtrong South-wind overwhelmed the whole Army with heaps of Sand carried along. He being gone againſt the Macrobian Ethiopians with the reſt of the Army, when having ſcarce finiſhed the fifth part of his journey, wanting Viſtuals, he returned to Memphis. Where when the Egyptians did make Holy-day for the Apparition of Oſiris: (in the ſhape of a Bull) he ſuppoſed that they had done it for his diſgrace, as if they had reproached him for his miſfortune: he killed the Priests and Egyptians playing, he wounded the Bull of Oſiris, by which wound afterwards he pined away. A little after he killed his brother Smerdes, and his Siſters, ſuffering puniſhments worthy of his wickedneſſe. Herodotus, Libro 21.

76.

The Persians burned the Anaſtorian Temple of Ceres in Eleuſis. Afterwards, when they were conquered at Plataea (a City of Beotia) by the Grecians, with a very great ſlaughter. Not one of the Persians was ſeen to enter the Temple of Ceres, which was there, nor lying about the Temple, as if the goddeſſe did drive away thoſe, who had deſtroyed her Temple. Herodotus, Libro 9.

77.

78.

Suidas doth rehearse, that there was one Anagyrion a quick spirited man, (so named from the place Anagyrus in Attick) who, because an old man, his neighbour, cut down his Grove, thus revenged himself. The Concubine of the old man, cast a raging love upon his, who when she could in no wise penetrate the breast of the young man with the sense of her love, she voluntarily accused him before his father, that he did not cease to appeach him of Whoredome. His father being perswaded by the Woman, did throw his son headlong from the top of the house, and killed him. Afterwards repenting his deed, he hanged himself. Lastly, the woman cast her self into a Well. He doth write the Author of this thing, Hieronymus in opere de Tragediarum Scriptioribus. Hence arose that Proverb;

Anagyrus commoves. Erasmus:

79.

Asculapius grieving that a great part of a Grove, which was dedicated to him at Coos was cut down by Turulus one of the officers of Antonius, to make his Ships, but in that wicked service the parties of Antonius being overcome, Turulus was condemned to dy by the command of Cesar, who brought him to the place which he had violated, and caused, that being slain there, by the Cesarean Souldiers, he might suffer for the same destruction and overthrow of the Trees; (whereby the force of that Deity was made known) and that he might obtain freedome to those that were yet standing from the like injury. Afterwards the god encreased his worship, which was had alwaies in very great esteem among the Inhabitants. Valerius, libro 1. capite 2. Lactantius, libro 2. de Origine erroris, capite 8.

80.

Pollux Onomastici libro 5. writeth that amongst the Athenians, Apothetibus, that is to say, Virgins of Diana, were wont to be consecrated or initiated before they were marriageable, there was a Law decreed at Athens, that no maid should be given in marriage to a man si prius deos non fecerit, that is to say, unless she had performed those sacred rites to Diana, which they used to solemnize in the Moneth of January. Libanus in his Oration which he made in praise of Diana, sheweth that the Virgins used to put on a garment which they named Crocota, being of the colour of Saffron, and that they were not to exceed the age of ten years, nor under five, Diana was thought to be pleased with them, who for the like occasion, seemed to conceive some anger. They report that there was sometimes in Athens a Bear which was made so tame, that she was nothing at all offensive to any, but did freely feed here and there at her pleasure, wandring about, no one receiving any hurt thereby. It happened that a young maid playing somewhat too sportively with the Bear, who enraged therewith, suddenly and violently snatcheth her: which her brothers seeing, threw fiercely with Darts,

Darts, and killed her, for which cause the pestilence began to rage abroad about the Countrey thereabouts. The Oracles being consulted, the gods answered, that the sickness would not cease unless they compelled some Virgins the reason of this is that is, for the destruction of the Bear, to kill some Virgins in the honour of Diana, Celins, lib. 26. cap. 19.

THe Tanagrean Boetians had a Temple dedicated to Mercurius Creophorus for that Mercury did avert the Plague, when they carried about the Walls a Ram, for which cause he appointed that he who carried the Ram should be attended by Tanagrean pipes, or musick; he of the young men who was esteemed by all to excell the rest in beauty, in the feast day of Mercury, carrying a Lamb upon his shoulder, went round about the walls with it, which was a most present remedy against the Plague. Pausanias, in Boetia.

81.

IN the eighth year of the reign of Numa, the pestilence which raged all about Italy, wasted Rome also; The Citizens struck with fear, deliver a brazen target sent down from heaven by divine power; Hereupon they tell the King wonderfull stories, that they received of Egeria at Camene, and that those arms were sent for the safety of the City, and that they were to be kept with an eleven more, which were to be made of like figure amplitude and form, that no thief for his profit might be able to invent the similitude being heavenly things, and that he ought to consecrate the field at Camenes, and the Meadows lying about it, where they for the most part met with him, and that they should consecrate the Well which watered the field to the Vestall Virgins, the water whereof doth purge and water all penetrables. To these having given credit, they tell that the disease presently departed. Plutarch, in Numa.

82.

Phalefius a private man builded the Temple of Asculapius at Naupactum from the foundation. On a certain time the God which was worshipped at Epidaurus, sent Anites a Noble woman, to him, when he was very sick, and almost blind, to make Verses, with signed Tables. The woman seemed to her self to receive them in a dream. But the thing was proved by the event. For when she was awake, she held the sealed Tables in her hands. Therefore when she came to Naupactum, she bid Phalefius to look upon the letters having taken away the Seal. At first he thought that a blind man could not see the letters. But being in good hope that Asculapius had sent him something to cure him, unsealing the Tables, he looked upon the wax, and forthwith he perceived himself to be eased of the calamity of his sight. Pausanias, in Phocis.

83.

84. Sesostres the King of the Egyptians being dead, his son (which Herodotus calleth Varro) receiving the Crown, and taking his Fathers name, he in no wise imitated the glory of his Father. But was afflicted with the same misfortune as his Father. For being blind, either by the common nature of his Father, or, as some say, for his impiety against Nilus (into whose belly he threw a Dart) he was compelled to fly to the assistance of the gods, and having made divers sacrifices to appease the Deities, for a long time he had no help. After ten years he received an answer, that the god which was worshipped in Heliopolis, being appeased, he should look upon the face of a woman, which knew no man carnally besides her own Husband: so beginning from his own Wife when he had many, he found none that was uncorrupted, besides the wife of a certain Gardiner, whom he took to Wife after he had received his sight, but he burned all the rest in a certain Village. Which place the Egyptians afterwards called, The holy Turf. But he giving thanks to the god of Heliopolis according to the Oracle received, he erected two Obelisks of one stone, eight foot broad and an hundred high. Diodorus, lib. 1. cap. 4.

85. VVhen a certain woman said to Adrian the Emperour being very sick, that she was admonished in her sleep by the gods, to exhort him, not to kill himself, although he seemed to languish under a tedious disease, because in a short time he should receive his health. The same woman did put out her own eyes, because the health of the Prince did not answer in time according to her report. Lastly also, she was admonished to kisse the knees of Adrian, and wash her eyes with the water which was in the Temple, and having followed the advice of her dream, she presently received her sight. In like manner a certain man being come from Pannonia, which was blind from his birth, having touched Adrian, obtained his sight, and Adrian was restored to his former good health.

86. Amasis King of the Egyptians, married a Wife, (which some would have to be the daughter of Battus, the son of Archefilaus: others, of Critobulus, a very honourable man amongst his people) by name Ladices, with whom when he lay in bed, he could not perform his marriage duty, as when he made use of other women. When it was so a long time, Amasis said to her, Thou, O Wife hast bewitched me, and therefore thou canst not escape by any policy, whereby thou mightest not perish by the worst death among all women. When Ladices could not appease Amasis by denying it, she vowed (within her self) to Venus, that if Amasis might copulate that night with her, she would send an Image to her at Cyrena. Her wish being granted, Amasis copulated with her, and afterwards as often as he lay with her, he performed his matrimonial duty, and afterwards he loved her dearly. And Ladices performed med her vow, having made a Statue, and sent it to Cyrena, which remained whole till the time of Herodotus, being placed without the Cyrenenian City. Herodotus lib. 2.

When Milo Epirota, had cast a spear at Leodamia the daughter of Pyrrhus, which fled to the Altar of Diana, as to a defence, the goddess revenging her, he ran mad, whereby he died within the space of 12. dayes.

87.

When a certain sacrifice was performed to Jupiter Ascreus, a herd of Goats belonging to Holicarnassus being brought to the Temple, flood, and the prayers being ended, one of them, (no body guiding it) went forward till he came to the Altar, which the Priest taking, sacrificed. Apollonius, de Hist. Mirab.

88.

In Beotia they think that Hercules doth shut and open the Temple of Ceres Mucallesia every night. Moreover they put all the Apples which Autumn brings forth, at the feet of the Image, and they remaine very fresh the whole year. Pausanias, in Beoticis.

89.

There was a Village of the Nysaenes between Tralles and Nysa, not far from the City, by name Achrota, where is a place belonging to Pluto, encompassed with a sumptuous Grove. Also the Temple of Pluto and Juno, and the Den of Charon admirable by nature, which is above the Grove. They report that sick people that desire to be cured by these gods, do go thither, and carry in a Village near the Cave with those that are skillfull in the holy things, who sleeping, receive cures for them in their dreams. The Priests calling for the remedies of the gods, do oftentimes lead them into the Den, where remaining as in a Cave, they spend many dayes fasting and sleeping: sometimes those that are sick, do receive health in their own Dreams, by the guiding and advice of the Priests. Strabo, lib. 14.

90.

Epidaurum a City of Peloponnesus, being ennobled by the famousnesse of Aesculapius, who (as the ancients write) hath cured divers kinds of diseases. But the Temple was filled with a multitude of sick people, and Tables hanging up, in which the diseases that were cured were written. In the same manner it was in the Island Cos, and likewise in Tricca. The City was situated in the innermost Closter of the bosome of Saronicus. Strabo, lib. 8. The same Strabo writeth that there was a famous Temple of Aesculapius at Tetrapolis, which City was inhabited by the Itians and Carians. That Temple was full of an innumerable convention of sick people, troubled with divers diseases, and the walls were every where covered with painted Tables, wherein were written the diseases and names of them which were cured by that god.

91.

They

92. They record that there is a Temple of Minerva Ilias, in which Dogs are nourished, to whom it is given naturally, as also by some certain knowledge, to fawn upon the Graecians when they come, but follow the Barbarians with barking wheresoever they shew themselves. Celins, lib. 23. cap. 30. Antiq. lib.
93. There is a round Temple of Hercules of admirable structure in the beast-market of Rome, into which (they relate) neither Dogs nor flies can enter. As no bird can enter into the Temple of Achilles before Borythenes. Alexander ab Alexand. lib. 2. cap. 14.
94. There was a Temple of Pallas at Atabon, a City of Peloponnesus, Diomedes dedicating an Image, because before that, he received damage by most violent Winds in those parts, blowing very unseasonably, which presently after ceased, when they prayed to the goddess, and afterwards no such calamity came upon the Inhabitants. From whence she got the name Minerva. Celins, lib. 20. cap. 34. Antiq. lib.
95. When Greece was troubled with a continuall drought, and the rest of Greece was no less distracted for want of rain, which was without Isthmus, than all Peloponnesus; they sent to Delphos, that they might know by the Oracle the cause and remedy of the calamity. There Pythia answered, that they must appeale Jupiter, but they must make use of Æacus to sue for them, so that he is willing to obey. Therefore when they had received that answer, they sent out of every City, to entreat Æacus to undertake the entreaty. He, having finished the sacrifices to Jupiter, and offered the vows, replenished all Greece with abundance of rain. For the memory of the thing, the Citizens of Argos, did erect statues for the Ambassadors. Pausanias, in Corinthiaca
96. The Sepulchre of Aristomenes of Messene, is worthy to be seen in a Colledge of Messene, (a City of Achaia in Greece) which they say in good earnest, is not empty, and a monument set up for honour of the body not present. For although he, being driven from the Spartans, died in banishment, yet by the command of Pylbus Apollo, his bones were carried back into his Countrey, and such things were ordained to be holy. They bound a Bull which was destined to the Altar, to a Pillar not far from the Tomb. He, being mad, and raging because of his bonds, did strive to go away. Which if the while the Bull moveth nimbly, and danceth according to that, it is ominous to the Messenians: but if on the contrary, the Bull shal stand immoveable, they interpret that it portends some calamity to them. The Lacedemonians report the Heroick Aristomenes to have been at the Leudrican fight 187. years after his death, vvhó assisting the Thebans against them, vvrought so, that he afflicted them them vvith a great discomfiture. Pausanias, in Messeniacis.

AT Pachinum, a Promontory of Sicily, Apollo Lybistinus is worshipped with great devotion; for when the Lybians were about to invade Sicilie, their Navy having arrived at the Promontory, Apollo being invoked by the Inhabitants, sent the Plague amongst their enemies; and destroyed almost all of them with sudden death; whereupon Lybistinus was added as a surname to him. Macrobius, lib. 1. cap. 17.

97.

THe Persians, Xerxes leading them to the Chappel of Minerva, which standeth before the Temple of Delphos, as they came thither, upon a suddain a Thunder-bolt from Heaven fell amongst them, with the two heads of Parnassus, being rent from the rest of the Mountain, with an horrid noise tumbled down, and intercepted very many of them; whereupon from the very Chappel of Minerva came most joyfull vociferations and jubilations. The Barbarians committing themselves to flight, departing from Delphos, they published their great discomfiture; those which escaped of them, fled to Bætia, reporting, That two armed men more noble then any of humane nature could possibly be, pursuing them. These two they said were Natives, and Heroick men at Delphos, the one Phylacus, the other Antonius, the Temples dedicated to them being there to be seen; That dedicated to Phylacus, standeth by the way above the Temple of Minerva; and that which was dedicated to Antonius, near Castalia, under the whirlpool Hyampeum. Herodotus, lib. 8.

98.

IN the Sabine Warr which was waged against the Romans for ravishing the Virgins, The Romans made haste to shut the gate which was at the foot of the Viminalian Hill, (which afterwards by occasion of what happened, was called the gate of Janus) because the enemies did rush upon it; after it was made fast, flew open; and when again and again the third time the same thing happened, more armed men came to the threshold of it, because they could not shut it, to make it good against the enemy. And when the enemies fought most fiercely on the other side, it was presently given out, That the Romans were overcome by Tacitus; for which cause, which defended the gate or entrance of the City fled. And when the Sabines had made an irruption into it through the gate, it is reported, that from the house of Janus, by this passage, the great power of torrents scattering water all about broke out, burning the great and vaste numbers of their enemies with scalding waters, and devouring them with rapacious gulphs. Macrobius, lib. 1. Saturnal, cap. 9.

99.

100.

THe holy sheep of the Sunne; which are at Apollonia in the bosome of Ionicum, which in the day time feed along the River side, which floweth out of the Mountain Larmonen through the Apolloniata field into the Sea; and chosen men, honourable by birth and Riches amongst the people, keep them lodged in the night in a Cave not far from the City, the people every year making new election, for that the Apolloniata by a certain Oracle were brought to put an high value upon the Sheep. There a certain Gentleman called Evenius chosen to take the care of looking to the Sheep, upon a time fell asleep, and Wolves entring into the Cave, killed sixty of them; which when the Apolloniata understood, they condemned him to the losse of his eyes for sleeping when he should have watched: upon execution of which sentence, their cattle ceased to bring forth young ones, and the earth to yield her fruit, and they had Cattle at Dolona and Delphos. The Prophets being asked the cause of this present vill; answered, because they had unjustly deprived Evenius the keeper of the holy sheep of his eyes, and that the Wolves were sent by the gods, and that their punishments for this wrong should not cease till he was satisfied by those who had perpetrated this wrong to him whatsoever Evenius himself conceived due satisfaction; and then that the Gods would so blesse them, that they would find themselves happy. The Apolloniata keeping these Oracles close, chose certain Citizens to perform them, who came to Evenius sitting in a station for the purpose, and sitting down with him, discourse of other things, at last came to speak of the miseries of the times; which making as an introduction to speak of his wrong, they demand of him what must he would wish the Apolloniata to undergo for his full satisfaction, who having not heard of the sentence of the Oracle, said that he desired two manours which he conceived the greatest revenues belonging to the Apolloniata, and a house which he knew to be the best in the City: the Citizens presently assented, and telling what directions they had received from the Oracle, and buying the Mannours of the Owners thereof, gave them to Evenius, who presently thereupon obtained divination from the gods, whereby he grew famous. Herodorus, Libro 9. cap. 7.

101.

THe P. Lappii inhabit that furthest part of Scandinavia, bordering upon the frozen Sea, and almost inclosed with the Sea; These neither till the ground, nor nourish any cattle, but the Tarandus or Buff which they make use of in the Winter when the waters are glaz'd, and all things made stiff with the Frost; for they live by hunting and fishing, and they have ever hitherto worshipped wood and stones; when they went on hunting, fishing, or began any other business, having used certain adjurations, they endeavour to move out of their place their gods which they consult; which if they easily perform, they conceive they favour their enterprise, enterprise, and promise successe; but if they cannot move them without much trouble, they think their success is denied; and if they cannot possibly move them out of their places, they conclude, that their gods are offended; And therefore they think they are to be appeased by a certain sacrifice, which they order in this manner; They have a brazen vessel, wherein are the pictures of all kinds of four-footed Beasts, of Birds, and Fishes, which are common and plentiful amongst them; they have the image of a Frog made of brass annexed to a piece of Iron fastned to the middle of the vessel like a plumb; afterwards using adjurations, they beat upon the vessel, and into the picture of whatsoever creature the Frog doth thereupon fall or leap, as soon as the frog had but touched it, they procure a living creature of that kind; they kill it, and hang the head thereof upon a Tree which they account holy; the rest they cook or dress, and consume with their friends which they call about them; and according to their sacred rites, (as they think) they anoint themselves with that wherewith the host is boyled; such holy rites finished, (as they say) they have learned by experience, such things they undertake, succeed prosperously. Olaus Magnus.

of

and image of Evil Deeds.

[The page contains faint, illegible mirrored text from the reverse side.]

Of Sathan's wonderful Legerdemains, Deceits, and Impostures, used, for the setting up, and establishing Idolatry, by Invocation of Saints departed this life, worshiping of Statues and Images, and for confirmation of the doctrine of Purgatory, contrary to the preaching of St. Paul, 2 Theß. 2.

T Heodofius the Emperour, unjustly suspecting John Damascene, a Monk, of betraying the Secrets of the Empire to the Persians, with whom he had been prisoner, punished him with the loss of one of his hands; he therefore imploring help of the blessed Virgin, as he was before her Image, had his hand restored, and perfectly united to his arm in the sight of many, though it had for many days been fixed to the doors of the Church. Fulgosus, lib. 1. cap. 6,

1.

N Icephorus, lib. 15. cap. 23. relateth, That a certain Jew of the Arch-Synagogue was taken as the Author of a tumult, raised at Constantinople in the time of Leo the Emperour, and condemned to fearfull torments, in the midst whereof he cryed out with a loud voyce, O God of holy Sergius, help me! holy Sergius, thou hast known me and mine innocency. The Judges suspecting, what he spoke to be cunning dissimulation, condemned him to be burnt; who when he was in the midst of the flames, there appeared two horsemen arrayed in white robes, who for many hours kept him preserved, and untoucht by the fire; which the people with much wonder beholding, at length, running into the flames, snatch'd him away.

2.

When the body of the Virgin Levinus was carried through the Towns and Garrisons of that part of Flanders which lyeth to the Sea-side, those who were sick of the Palsie, deaf, lame, and troubled with other diseases, were suddenly cured. And two Wax Candles, put out by the wind; as soon as they were brought to the bones of the dead Virgin, kindled by vertue thereof. Jacobus Meyer, ex scriptis Dryonis tunc temporis Morinorum Episcopi.

3.

4. MAny blind and lame were brought to the Sepulchre of Pope Martin the fourth, (who had been warlike enough) and recovered their former health, by using such devotions there, as were then used at the Sepulchres of the dead. Platina.

5. THe Coach in which the dead body of S. Ladislaus King of Hungary was carried, the keepers thereof sleeping, and the beasts feeding, without any inforcement went to Varadinum with such celerity, that the keepers could not keep company with it, neither could any man by any means possibly stay it; As they were committing the body to the Sepulchre, the face of a certain man (which they say had a loathsome smell) turn'd towards his back, and hanged upon his shoulder, having tryed many ways for help, and finding none, comes to the Sepulchre, and cries out with a loud voyce, O Holy Ladislaus, I have wronged thee, holy Prince forgive me: And, the incensed divine power appeased by his humble and hearty veneration, his chin was brought to its proper place, and he perfectly restored. Bosinius, lib. 4. Decadit, 2.

6. THe Bishop of Prague in Livonia, by the persecution of the Abdeberti, losing a finger for the faith of Christ, the executioners or cutters off of his finger, threw it into a River in the Countrey of the Vandals, in which Countrey he had oft preached; which a fish presently swallowed; whereupon the fish shined with a circle of glaring flame: the Fishers espying it, and taking it for a wonderfull portent, after great industry used to catch it, at last obtained their desire; and having taken out the bowels of the fish, they found the finger shining with a glaring light. Idem, lib. 1. Decadis secunda, historiae Ungar.

7. Genarius of Beneventum having his head cut off for professing the faith of Christ, it and his blood put into a Viall, were kept in two severall Churches; and when they were both solemnly carried through the City, the blood which was congealed into a ball; when it did but touch the head, dissolved into as fresh blood as it was when it flowed from the Martyr at his decollation; and when it was taken from his head, it congealed again into a round form as it was before: And that we might be more assured of the truth hereof, we had the testimonies of them who were diligent observers, and eye-witnesses of the same. Fulgosus, lib. 1. cap. 6.

V Alens, the Emperour, an Arrian, when he would have translated the Head of John the Baptist to Constantinople, could not possibly get the Coach wherein he had put it, to be moved or stirred, and therefore was forc'd to desist and leave off his undertaking; but Theodosius, an Orthodox Christian, did afterwards with much facility translate the very same head. Fulgosus, lib. 1. cap. 6.

8.

IN the time of the Warr of Otho and Philip, Emperours, the bodies of eleven thousand Virgins, three of them Kings, were seen to return to the Temple of Colonia, from the Abbey of Fuldenses in Thuringia, whence they had been translated from Colonia. In the morning betimes, whilst they sung the Psalms appointed by the Church for nocturns, the Abbot and Monks of that Monastery saw the bodies of the three Kings going out of the Temple, which not long after were found in the Temple of Colonia, whence they had formerly been translated, Idem, ibidem.

9.

V *V*hen John, a devout giver of alms, was dead, a certain woman for three dayes together continuing at his Sepulchre, weeping, for that she feared lest a writing (which she had delivered to him, and wherein was contained a great sin which she had committed, and which she had declared unto him) should come to the hands of any body that should know and divulge it; the Elemosynarian appeared to the woman, and delivered the schedule sealed, in which the former writing was blotted out, and written instead thereof, For my servant John's sake, thy sin is blotted out. Metap. in vita ejus.

10.

A Certain German called Conradus, repenting heartily of his sins, cometh to Rome, Hildebrand then Pope, commandeth him to wear instead of a shirt, a covering next his skin, tyed together with five chains stamped with letters, containing a catalogue of his sins, and commands him to visit the holy places all the world over, and there to pray for pardon, that he might have remission of his sins: he obeys; and travelling long and far, not omitting in his pilgrimage to visit Jerusalem, at length he cometh to Hungary, where he visiting the Sepulchre of the holy King Stephen, in the Church called Alba Regalis, and having humbly cast himself down in prayer, before the Altar, from the first hour to the ninth, being seized on by sleep [the Kingly Saint appears, saying, Rise quickly my friend, thou canst not by my merits or help, obtain pardon from the Tribunal of Almighty God, but go yonder to the Monument of my son Emericus, who by his Virginity procured great favour from Almighty God; whereupon he calling on the name of that Saint, found, that the chains wherewith he was tyed, fell all in sunder, and the stamps which were set upon them clean gone, so that they appeared plain; inasmuch, that there could no sinne of his be read, there not remaining so much as one small letter. Ever after this Temple was visited with such devotion, that Innumerable Worshippers came to it from very remote places. Bonfinius, lib. 1. Decad. 2.

11.

12.

ABout the third year after the miserable slaughter received by the Turks at Nicopolis, in the time of Sigismund the Emperour, when many went into the field where that battel had been fought, they heard a voyce amongst the bones of the dead, sounding forth the names of Iesus Christ the Saviour of the World, and the Virgin Mary; and looking amongst the dead corps, they espied out a head, which said, Why stand ye gazing so stupidly here? I am a Christian, who was slain here before confession, and therefore my finnes are not yet expiated; the blessed Mother, Mary, causeth that I am not afflicted with eternal punishment, and hath so preserved me, that I have yet my speech to confess my sins, and declare my mind to the holy Apostles; wherefore I pray you send for a Priest to receive my confession, and give me absolution. He being asked, How he had deserved so great favour from the Virgin? answered, She was my peculiar Patroness all my lifetime, seven Feasts every year all my lifetime I celebrated in honour of her, and did most strictly fast, eating nothing but bread and water theeves of all those Feasts; of all my Patrons and Patronesses she was chiefly relied on by me. A Priest from the next Town being sent for, he making an exact confession, received absolution; whereupon silenced, he rested in peace. Bonfinius, lib. 3. Decad. 3.

13.

Mercurius, a certain Hungarian, brought up at the Albensian Temple, when the King, Ladislavus, had commanded the Tomb of St. Stephen to be searcht, to see if any of the Reliques were taken away; being all alone, having retired himself into the holy Quire, with a doleful countenance, and sad heart, bewailing, that he could not so much as see, much lesse obtain a kiss of the sacred body; a young man in the dead of night appeared to him, who was beautified with incredible comelines, having a most cheerful countenance, and arrayed in white apparel, carrying somewhat wrapt in a fine cloath, said to him, Mercury, receive what thou hast so earnestly desired, and be sure highly to esteem this precious gift committed to thy trust, keep it with care and diligence, and view it when time serves. The sacred Nocturns devoutly finished, Mercury going to a private place, opens the cloath, and finds the right hand and ring of the holy King; shortly after, he being chosen Governour of a Monastery, built of wood, situated at the foot of the hill Carpasium, which divides Transylvania from Hungary, neither daring to trust himself, nor any one else with the hand, he hides it in the ground, and appointed every day some of the Monks to watch it, lest any man should steal it away. Then that Monastery sought to King Ladislavus, to be of the order of the King's hand, by whose Edict, the Pope's consent obtained, it was so established; Then the whole Colledg of Priests declaring to the King the whole story hereof, he repairs the the Monastery, so that he made it most beautifull to behold; and endowed it with great revenues in the year of grace, 1078; and now they call it, The Abbey of the King's right hand. Bonfinius, lib. 1. Decad. 2.

AS Bruno, Bishop of Hildesha, was solemnizing the Octaves of the Nativity of the blessed Virgin Mary, she appeared to him in the Temple, to whom the Bishop falling upon his knees, cries out, O Queen of Heaven, wherefore vouchsafest thou to come to me, a wretched poor man? To whom she answered, I rejoyce that thou art the author of the solemn celebration of the memory of my Nativity; whereby such honour accrueeth to my Sonne. Which said, she vanished away: From this time ever after, the Octaves of the Nativity of Mary were kept holy. Chron. Saxon.

14.

IN the year, 1495; Nicolaus, a familiar friend to the Treasurer of the Bishop of Quinclesia, as he was coming to the King Uladislaw at Buda, where he sometimes used to reside, saw in the Ayre a great light, which dazzled his sight; and with the noyse thereof making an hideous clashing, stupified his hearing; he was so affrighted, that he fell to the ground surprised with the strangeness thereof, and looking up towards heaven, he saw the shape of the Virgin; with her Son, having a glorious shining circle about them in the Ayre; steering their course towards Buda, and that he at that very instant shewed it to a certain stranger, called Boennas, and his Wife, and to his own Carter, to be taken notice of with reverence, it being the very day that was appointed for celebrating the memory of the Conception of the Virgin-Mother of God, which the Hungarians ever after observed with more devotion than formerly they had done. Sabellius, lib. 1. cap. 1.

15.

SAROLHA, the Wife of Grisa, Duke of the Hungarians, being great with child, saw Stephen the first Martyr, who appearing to her said, Woman, trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, and assure thy self, that I by Divine commandment am to inform thee, that thou shalt shortly be delivered of a gallant and fortunate son, who shall enjoy the Diadem of the Kingdom of Pannonia; and he shall be so excellent a man, that Pannonia shall never have the like after him to their King: and whereas I am Stephen the first Martyr, who shall assist thy son, let him have my name. Which spoken, he vanished away. Sarolha, confirmed by her dream that these things should come to passe, accordingly commanded holy devotions to be used at all the Altars of the Protomartyr; and in the year 909 the child was born. Bon. l. 1. Decad. 2.

16.

THE Parents of Nicolas Tollentinas told by an Oracle, what issue they should have, vowed a pilgrimage to Barium, where when they had continued long at their devotion in the Church of the Saint who is there worshipped; by chance, or rather providence providence fell asleep, wherein they were instructed with an unthought-of advertisement, and their former hopes of issue much increased, by assurance of successe to their vows and solemn devotions, nor were their prayers in vain, for greater and more blessed rewards followed then the heart of man could presume, that of unholy Parents, a Saint should be born. Sabellius, lib. 1. cap. 1.

17.

18. Haldrem the Leodiensian Bishop was afflicted for about a whole year with a Canker, and could receive no hopes of help from Physicians. Wherefore he commanded his servants to carry him to the Temple of Martin. Where, when for seven dayes together he had with sighs and tears continued his devotion before the Altar wearied, he fell asleep, and dreamed that he saw Martin and Briiciu together, discoursing concerning his sicknesse, and that Martin signed his forehead with the sign of the Crosse, and with a staff which he carried in his hand touched that part of him which was diseased. Therefore being awakened, for joy he cries out with a loud voice, to whom his servants (wondring at the noyse) run with speed, and removing the cloth wherewith the fore place was bound, found that it was whole, and that there onely remained a scar in the place where the Canker had been. Fulgosw, lib. 1. cap. 5.

19. THere was near Brundulum an holy Temple of Saint Michael, unto which one Temple the people of Clodia, Matemancum, and the Venetians themselves came with great Zeal to do their devotions. It happened also that at Senogallia, a certain man called Sergius, a Prince in wealth and Authority, was afflicted with a grievous disease, who heard a voice in the night, which said, if he would make a vow to visit the holy Temple of Saint Michael, he should recover his health. Whereupon he made a vow, and according thereto leaving his Country soyl, visited the Temple, and bestowing great gifts upon it, returned home to his own house being freed from his sicknesse. Egnatius, lib. 1. cap. 6.

20. John Orphanotrapu brother to Michael Emperour of Paphlagonia the Physicians despairing of his cure, in his sleep he saw Nicolas the Great, who admonished him to go to Myra, assuring him that as soon as he came thither, he should recover his health. He therefore speedily repairs thither, where deservedly bestowing upon the Clergy of that place, Oyntment and other rich and precious gifts, and encompassing the famous City of Myra with a most strong wall, he returns home perfectly cured of his disease. Cyrenus.

Henry the second, Emperour, when he took with great pain an exact view of the Cities of Apulia, was so miserably infected with the stone, that almost all men despaired of his recovery, but he sustained his sickness with so great patience, judging it to be as a rod of correction for his sins sent to him from Almighty God, that as he ascended the hill Cassinum, desiring the intercession of Saints, Saint Benedict, and Saint Scolastica; for Physicians could do him no good: He saw, in his sleep, Benedict standing by him, and with a Knife to have opened his privy members, and took out a great stone, making the wound whole, and putting it into the Kings hand, who awakened from his sleep, seeing and perceiving the great miracle, called his guard to him that they might fetch his Prince, to whom he shewed this great miracle, which transcended humane capacity and belief, together with the scar of the incision, out of which the stone had been taken. Therefore giving immense thanks to the most good, great, and immortal God, and giving to the Temple of Saint Benedict, most great gifts and offerings, and endowing it with great possessions, and yearly rents near adjoining therunto: He departed from Cassinum. Cuspianus.

21.

Manuela Captain under Theophilus the Emperour, who had disapproved the worship of Images, and then wavered in his Judgment concerning the same, fell into a grievous sickness, in so much that it was verily believed he would dye thereby, certain Monks of the Monastery of Studium, to whom it was shewed that he was dying, came to him, and approaching to his bed side, found by his breathing that he was yet alive, and delivered to him the joyfull tydings, that he should recover his health; how can this be, saith he, speaking with a weak and low voice, the faculties of his Soul being much weakened, and his body dried up with heat, the Monks answered, All things are possible with God, therefore if when he should recover his health, he would endeavour that Images might be restored according to the decrees of the Ancients, they assured him that he should be restored to life and health: which when they had with much certainty declared, they departed. In a short time after, his sickness was asswaged, and, his naturall faculties restored to their former strength, he was altogether freed from his sickness. Cedrenus.

22.

A Certain friend to Julian travelling with much haste towards him then in Persia, being forced for want of an Inn, to go somewhat out of his way to a Church which was near, reposed himself all night therein, whether sleeping or waking, he knew not: he saw in the night many of the Apostles Congregated, complaining of the contumelies and disgraces of the Emperour cast upon the Church, taking counsell amongst themselves, what was to be done; and having deliberately spoken of it, and many things more, they appearing as it were perplexed, two of them rising up in the midst of them, advising them to be of good cheer, making haste to destroy the Empire, they left that counsell or conference. The man who had this admirable Vision, neglecting the journey he had begun, that he might see the issue of his Vision, staves another night, and sleeps in the same place, and sees the same assembly; to whom upon a sudden, they which the night before went to fight against Julian, came in, as returned from their journey, and declared to the company, that Julian was dead. Sozomenus, lib. 6. cap. 2.

23.

more

24.

N Auglerus, lib. 2. Generatione decima-tertia, reports that Basill Bishop of Cæsaria Cappadocia, by reason of Julian his threatening to destroy Cæsaria as he returned from the Persian War, proclaiming a fast to be kept for three dayes in the Temple, to implore the help of Almighty God in the Church of the Virgin Mary, after finishing whereof, he saw in his sleep Mercury a Souldier lately dead; who by the command of the Virgin Mary, killed Julian, and that the arms hanging over his Tomb were gone thence: and the keeper of the Church demanded what was become of them, said, he knew not, but did affirm by Oath that they were there the last evening; Basill therefore returning to the Hill, called others up, and told them that Julian was dead, and going with them to the Sepulchre of Mercury, found his lance restored to the place it used to hang all bloody. But Hermanus Gyges, in floribus temporum, reports this in the time of Julian, not by Basill, but Blasius a certain Bishop of Cerasenses.

25.

E Dward the third, King of England, having almost reigned his twenty fourth year, there was a Ring brought him from Jerusalem, by certain men who came thence, which he long before had privately given to a poor man, who obtained it as an alms which he sought for the love that the King bore to Saint John the Evangelist: and not long after falling sick, having learnt the most absolute vertue of a Christian, which is contentedly to resign his Soul to the most great and glorious God, he was buried in the Temple of Westminster, and shortly after canonized a Saint; The ring was long after kept with great veneration in the same Church, which was a present cure to all infeeble and weak members of Men and Women, and by the touch of it the falling sicknesse was cured, hence it came to passe that the Kings of England were wont on Good Friday with many ceremonies to hallow the Ring, the which whosoever put upon his finger, should never be troubled with this disease. Polydor. lib. 8.

The

THe Statue of Saint Paul, an old piece, which Andronicus Comnenus Tyrannus adorning with Gold, placed in the Church of holy Quadragesima, which wept when the time approached that Andronicus was destroyed; Andronicus hearing thereof, commanded his servants to find out whether that were true; to which service besides others, his beloved servant Hagiocrisophorus Stephanus by stairs ascended (for the Statue was in a high place) and wiped the eyes thereof with fine linnen, whereupon tears more plentifully fell from them, as if they had flowed from a spring, which with great amazement he told. Andronicus struck thereupon with great grief, often shaking his head, he said; Paul wept for the great destruction that is to come to himself, for he accounts it his own cause, for he most cordially loved Paul, and did infinitely esteem his sayings, and was as well beloved by Paul. And not long after, hanged up by the heels, he expired his life by horrible torments. Nicetas, lib. 2.

26.

Leo the fifth of Ironomacum, his Mother, as it seemed to her, saw in the Temple of the Virgin Mary at Blachernes, a certain woman; her sonne apparelled in white, following her, and the floor of the Church being besprinkled with blood, another woman carrying a Spear in her hand, commanded a vessel to be filled, and to be given to the Mother of the King; which refused by her, she said to her, Thy son destroyes and gluts himself with the blood of all that worship we; wherefore I and my sonne are not without cause moved with wrath against him. The Mother of the King affrighted out of her sleep, presently declares what she had by Vision, and earnestly desires him to desist from the persecution of Images: But he, like the deaf Adder, stopped his ears, though he was somewhat afraid, and the more, for that the dream of another was declared to him: For Tarasius the Patriarch appeared to a certain man, calling vehemently upon one whose name was Michael, that he should go to Leo, and kill him, in revenge of them, whom most impiously and cruelly he had put to death for their Religion. And not long after, while he was in the Temple at divine service, he was slain by the conspiracy of Michael Traulus, Cuspinianus.

27.

Bardus Durus, a little before his destruction, dreamed, That as he was making haste with the Emperour Michael, to the solemnization of a certain holy-day, to the great Temple, whither when they approached near, they followed certain men apparelled in white, who led them to Seats about the Tribunal, wherein they saw a certain old man sitting alone, whom he thought to be Peter, chief of the Apostles, at whose feet Ignatius was cast down, whom a little before they had severely bound and castigated in revenge of the wrongs he had done: moreover, Peter delivering a sword to one of them who stood by, commanding that Theorgistus (for so he called Cesar as obnoxious to divine wrath) should be placed amongst those who stood on the left hand, and cut in pieces, and Aseboterus; by this name he deciphereth that Emperour as an impious son. Gedrenus.

28.

29. A Nocturnal Vision discovered to Aphrode the Mediolanensian Bishop, the bodies of the Martyrs Gervasius and Prothasius, it not being known to that day, where they lay, they appearing to him in his sleep, such as when they were found. So at Jerusalem in the seventh year of the reign of the Emperour Havirius, it appeared to Gamaliel Lucianus a Priest, by dream, where the body of Stephen the Protomartyr, and the bodies of the sons of Abiba lay; nor did he give credit to his dream or Vision, till the same was thrice presented to him in his sleep; and then seeking for the bodies, he found them in number and form according to his Vision, the Church keeps a holy-day for the invention of Stephen at this time in testimony hereof. Fulgensius, lib. 1. cap. 15.

30. Sozomenus gives a large narration, how Pulcheria, sister to Theodosius found out the forty Martyrs, which suffered under Lucianus at a certain place Sebastes, in Armenia, whose reliques as by digging she caus'd to be search'd for. Thence the Martyr appearing to her, suggested and admonish'd her to translate them to him; and afterwards the forty Martyrs in a military habit splendidly apparelled, manifested themselves to her. Sozomenus, lib. 9. cap. 2. Nicephorus saith, that Stephen the Protomartyr appeared to Pulcheria, whose reliques when the Citizens of Constantinople desired to take away and keep with them, he saith, the Mules which drew the Coach, wherein the reliques were spoke with a voyce like to men.

31. Here appeared to a certain Husbandman, named Calemorus, belonging to the Nice-President, Chophares near Eleutheropolis in Palestine, the Prophet Zacharias, who taking into a certain Orchard, shewed the places digged, wherein his reliques lay. Sozomenus, lib. 9. cap. 8.

32. It was commonly reported amongst the Venetians, That it was not for a long time known in what place the body of St. Mark lay, and that it was either by divine power translated from the place wherein it had there layn, or was stoln away; but upon publike warning of a solemn day, set apart to fast and pray, and observation thereof accordingly, the Citizens following the Clergy to the Temple of the Saint, they say this miracle happened, that an arm rising out of a side of the Church, appeared to the anxious and solicitous multitude; whereupon with great joy they remove the body, and lay it in a more honourable place; moreover, it was decreed, that it should onely be lawfull for the Prince, and Procurators of the Temple, to come to the most sacred Tomb of St. Mark. Sabel. lib. 3. Eusebius, lib. 9.

33.

Saint Benedict appeared to Pope Urban in his sleep, and said, Doubt not but my body rests at Cassinum; and for a testimony of the certainty hereof, thou rising with thy brethren to perform the office of the Church for Nocturns, shalt be cured of the Plurisie wherewith thou art now afflicted. The event proved directly according to the Vision. Chronicon Cassinense, lib. 4. cap. 5.

34.

Basilus Macedo, who afterwards obtained the Empire of Constantinople, when he was a child, lost his father. His mother much afflicted with poverty, resolved by her labour in service to maintain her self and son, coming to Megalopolis at night; because poor woman, she wanted wherewithall to defray her charges at an Inn, she went to the Church of Saint Diomedes, and being wearied with her travel, fell asleep; the holy Martyr that night appeared to a certain Deacon of that house (which had not yet taken the orders of a Priest) in a dream, and commands, that he take into the house the King which lay out a doors, in a ditch close to the porch of the Temple; The Deacon awakened with his dream, went out and finds Basil, a young youth asleep; and thinking it a sleepy phantasm, returned into the Temple, and falling asleep again, he was again and again awakened with the same Vision, wherein he was strictly admonished, that he should fetch in the King; therefore at length he goeth to Basilus, and raising him from his sleep, courteously invired and led him into the Temple, and helped him to all necessary accommodation, whereof he then stood in need: This Deacon had a friend and kinsman at that time, a servant to Theophiliza, who for his affinity was familiar with the Emperour Michael and Barda Caesar his Uncle by his mothers side; this Deacon declares to his brother the vision he had seen, and desires him, that he would help this Basil, whom according to the command he had in his vision, entertained into the service of some Prince, who preferred him to his Lord Theophiliza; and presently these two brothers tell the dream to Basil, and bind him by oath to requite what kindness he had received from them, when he should enjoy his Kingdom. Cuspinianus, ex Zonara & Cedreno.

35.

Elfred, King of England, heavily afflicted with the losse he received by the victory of the Danes over him, Bishop Osbert appeared to him in his sleep, saying, England is justly scourged for her former sins; but Almighty God looks with mercy and compassion upon the meritorious prayers, sufferings, and tears of his distressed servants and Saints: thy Kingdom is with much cruelty extorted from thee, but after a short time of affliction thou shalt be gloriously restored, and firmly settled in thy Land, and this shall be the sign of the certainty of what I tell thee, Thy fishers shall this next day come to thee laden with infinite store of fish; And, which increaseth the Miracle, though the waters be frozen, so that humane reason cannot possibly hope for any such thing, and the coldness of the weather is such, that it seemeth a most ridiculous thing to endeavour to catch fish; yet what I say, shall come to pass, and when thou art in prosperity, remember thy deliverance, and the messenger thereof; his mother had the like Vision, both of them awaking, tell their dreams, and immediately the fishers come to them with abundance of fish. Vincentius, lib. 24. cap. 40. ex Holinand. Et Willielmus, lib. 2. cap. 14. de gestis Anglorum.

36. VHen Hungus, King of the Pihs, a Christian, was to fight with Athelstane King of England, in ayd of the Scots; in the night, the Armies both of Hungus and Athelstane, saw in the Firmament a shining cross in the form of St. Andrews cross, resembling the Greek letter \times , which was cause of fear and terrour to them. But Hungus warned by a dream, encouraging his Souldiers, assured them, that the cross was a sign of Victory to them; which accordingly came to pass. Cardanus, lib. 13. de rerum varietate, cap. 81.

37. Edgar King of the Scots, being about to fight against Donaldus, was admonished by a dream, that he should bring with him the Standard of St. Cuthbert; therefore having performed some accustomed holy ceremonies and devotions, he took the Standard out of the Monastery, and the Souldiers belonging to Donaldus forsaking him, he was taken without sedition or blood shed. Cardanus, ibidem.

38. Uladislaus and Geysa, brethren, as they were setting their Army in order to fight a battle against Salomon, King of the Hungarians, an Angel was perceived by Uladislaus, to put a crown of gold upon the head of Geysa; who as soon as his brother informed him thereof, vowed to dedicate a Temple, in the place where he should obtain the victory, to the blessed Virgin; and the Enemies being overcome, deliberately advising concerning the same, where hard by a Church dedicated to St. Peter, behold, a Stag which had a most remarkable head, with broad interwoven horns, upon whom most shining shapes appeared, he made towards a Wood, and there stood at gaze, where the Temple was afterwards built, the Souldiers following after the Stag, and seeking with their arrows to shoot him, he fled into Danubius, and was never afterwards seen. Uladislaus much taken with this wonderfull sight, saith, No doubt but this was the Angel of God; but what was that appearance of a face in his horns? presently saith Geysa, They were not horns, but wings; nor shapes of bright faces, but most glorious shining feathers; but where he stood at gaze, is the place wherein we are directed to build the Temple; wherefore hard by the Church of St. Peter, they built a Temple to the blessed Mother. Bonfinius, lib. 3. & 4. Decad. 2.

THe night before Theodosius joyned battle with Eugenius at the Alpes, he dreamed, as Paul Diaconus and Nicephorus write, that two men gloriously apparelled in white, sitting upon white horses, commanded him to begin his battle by the break of day, for it was decreed by Divine providence, that he should victoriously overcome his enemies; and that they declared their names to be John the Evangelist, and Philip the Apostle, and that a certain Soldier had the like dream, is reported by Theodoretus, lib. 5. cap. 24. 39.

M*Assaclerus* sent by the Emperour Honorius against Gildo to regain Africa from his brother, who ambitiously affected the Empire, in his sleep dreamed, that he saw the Mediolensian Bishop, Ambrose, (a dead man long before) with his pastorall staff to strike the ground thrice, and thrice to say, Here, even in this very place. And the next day, Masaclerus with much facility overthrew Gildo. Fulgosus. 40.

THe Roman Prince, retreating to Antioch, Andrew the Apostle appeared to a Priest, named Peter Pontus, one indued with simplicity, void of fraud, and shewed to him the Spear which pierced our Saviour's side, which lay buried in a Temple dedicated to St. Peter; upon finding whereof, the besieged City, oppressed with famine, were so far encouraged, that they made a gallant Sally, wherby they overcame Corhana who besieged the City by command and advice of Belseb Turca King of the Persians, he being encouraged thereunto by divination, gathered from the flying of birds; the Bishop of Nicene carrying the Lance which had pierced our Saviours side, amongst the Troops of those who sallied out in array against the besiegers. Emilius. 41.

WHen there had been long and doubtfull War 'twixt the Romans and Rossians, those who came from Constantinople to John Zimisca, auxiliaries to the Emperour, did by divine providence assist the Romans: for as it is reported, a storm did violently beat in the faces of their enemies, and furthermore a mighty horseman was seen of many, who running amongst the Romans, broke the Ranks of the Enemies; and it appears it was Theodore, for that a Religious Woman of Byzantium, dreamed the night before that fight, that she saw the Mother of God with a great company, who said, O Theodore, thy dear friend John, and mine too, is in a great strait, being now in battell. Wherefore bring him speedy help, she told her dream to certain honest friends of hers, who observing the time, found that it was the very night before the last day of their fighting. Ut Zonaras, Tomo 3. indicat. 42.

43.

A Rzulphus Duke of Spoleto, fighting against the Romans at Camertes, and obtaining Victory, inquires of his Souldiers who it was that behaved himself so stoutly and gallantly in the battle; they answered, 'twas a Prince: Whereupon he replies, he was more powerfull then any mortall man, for when ever I was assaulted fiercely by the enemy, he with a Buckler defended me from their fury; then going with all possible speed to Spoleto, seeing the Temple wherein the body of Saint Sabinus is intombed, he asked what Church it was; when they answered, It was the Temple of Sabinus, he hastily leaps from his horse, calling his Souldiers, who as they say alwayes waited diligently upon him, walks into the Church, and seeing his Image, he presently with an Oath affirmed 'twas he that protected him from the violent assaults of his numerous enemies; whereupon 'twas presently believed that Sabinus was the most pious Patron of Souldiers. Ariulphus would not for any thing have wanted the experience of this Protection of Saints, which is so frequent amongst Christians. Bonfinius, lib. 8. Decad. 1.

44.

T He great Sfortia for the honour he bore St. Leonard, Christened his Son which he had by Catella Alopa, sister to Pandulphus Alopus, after his name, for that he dreamed he saw Leonard in the same shape he is usually pictur'd in Churches, coming to him being a Prisoner with relief, breaking the Iron bars of the window of the Prison, and with his power loosing his shackles. The event proved this Vision to be very true, for the day following this blessed dream; Jacobus Gallus King, by sedition was driven out of the Neopolitan Kingdome, and lost both Rule and Liberty, and Sfortia was delivered out of Prison, and to the great content of all was restored to be Master of the Horse. Jo. viii. in Vita ejus.

45.

I N the time of Ferdinand first King of Aragon, the City Neopolitane in a most flourishing condition, and the Kingdome free from all calamity, it is manifest that Cataldus, about a thousand years before that time, an holy man had been Bishop at Tarentinum, and that the Citizens thereof did worship him as their Patron, in the midst of the night, he again and again appeared to a Minister of holy things, who had lately taken the order of Priest-hood, having been educated amongst those who vow chastity, that he should without delay take out of the ground a little book which he in his life time had writ, and hid in a private place, wherein some divine writings were, and bring it to the King, giving little credit to this dream although he saw him in his sleep very oft, and alwayes of the same shape and fashion; being all alone early in the morning in the Temple, he plainly appeared to the Priest with a Mitre, in such Bishops weeds as he used in his life time to be apparelled in, advised him, as he desired to avoid great punishment, that the next day without further delay, he should dig for the

the Book which he had written, and which was hidden as he had formerly shewed him by Visions, and bring it to the King, the Priest and people went the next day to the place, wherein for many ages, this little book had been hid, and found it bound with a leaden cover, and locked, wherein it appeared, that the destruction of the Kingdome, miserable calamities, and sad times were at hand, whereof the King was warned we have learned by experience that this Prophecy was fully executed, and shewed it self to be so divine, that not long after Ferdinand himself, either by the justly incensed wrath of Almighty God, or other inscrutable causes of his divine will, could avoid what he was so fully admonished of, but in the very first appearance of War, departed this life, and Charles the eight King of France, with a strong hand, having an huge Army of Neapolitans, invaded the Kingdom: and Alfonso the eldest son of Ferdinand, after his fathers death, having but newly undertaken the government of the Kingdome, was thereof deprived, basely running away, and dying in flight as a banished man; shortly the second son of Ferdinand, the hopefulliest of whose youth had endeared him to all men, to whom upon the death of his brother, the Kingdome fell, was intangled with a miserable and fatall War, died of an immature death in the very flower of his age, afterwards, the French and Spaniards obtaining the Kingdome, divided it, chasing away Frederick, another Son of Ferdinand the elder, with a larger Army, wherewith they invaded the Kingdome, took to themselves all, whether holy or prophane, plundered Towns and Cities, laying all waste, committing most vile and filthy immanities. Alexander ab Alexand. cap. 15.

James the son of Zebedee appeared to Charles the Great, three severall nights, and did exhort him to drive out of the Countrey of Spain, in which his body rested, the Saracens; and assured him for his labour and travail therein, he should obtain an everlasting crown. Henricus Brphordiensis ex Turpino Romensi Episcopo refert. cap. 68.

The Monks of the Abbey of Florence, assured of the expedition of the Normans into France, carry the body of Saint Benedic to Aurelia, conceiving it a more safe recepracle from the Enemy, at the coming of the Normans, they burnt the Abbey of Florence, and laid it wast, the night following, Saint Benedic appeared to Count Sigilfosu, to whom the care and defence of that Monastery was committed, and in a Vision heavily chideth him, because he had not resisted the Normans, when they fell upon the Monastery. The Earl awakening, presently fell to his arms, and with a handfull of men pursues the enemies loaden with plunder, following them with a swift course, fiercely falls upon them; and by the help of Saint Benedic, kills them every man, and redcems all the Prisoners and booty. Robertus Ganquinus, lib. 3.

48. C Hildebert being King of France, the Arch-Angell Michael again and again admonished Anbertus the Abrençatenſian Biſhop, that wholly in the Sea, which by reaſon of his eminency is called his Tomb, he ſhould build a Church in memory of him; requiring ſuch veneration to be given him in the Sea, as was exhibited to him in Gorganum; in the mean time a Bull which was taken by a Lyon, was found bound in that place. Whereupon the Biſhop was commanded the third time, that he ſhould lay the foundation of the Temple, where he ſhould find the Bull, and as he ſhould obſerve the ground beaten with the feet of the Bull, he ſhould draw the compaſſe of the Temple which he built in honour of Saint Michael, and from that time, as in the Mountain Gorganum formerly, in that place alſo now in danger of the Sea, the worſhip of the Angell was begun. Sigebert, Anno Dom. 799.

49. A Gnes Wife to Leopold Marqueſſe of Austria deſired her Husband to deſign ſome place wherein to build a Monastery that the prayſes of Chriſt and his Mother might therein be ſaid. From a Caſtle ſeated in the Mountain Cecium over againſt Danubia, a gentle Weſtern wind ſnatched from the head of Agnes a vail, and whirled it into a Wood hard by, which when Leopold nine years after in his game of hunting, found undecayed, being as freſh as when 'twas loſt, in that very place he built the Monastery deſired by his Wife. Cuſpianus, in Austria.

50. T He ſecond Ceſar buſied in divers Wars, the Longobards conſpired and entred into covenant by oath, to be ſubject to Comrade only; to the reducing of whom to obedience, Ceſar came to Mediolanum, (where the Biſhop thereof had as it were the Government) and beſieged it: during which time, moſt fearful thunder there ſupplied and terrified the people, and (as it was reported by them) the Biſhop and others ſaw in the Ayr (whileſt that tempeſt laſted) Ambroſe threatening cruel miſeries to Ceſar; to be ſhort, the Suburbs being burned, the Emperour removed his ſiege in the year of our Lord, 1013, and left them to the enjoyment of their covenant, according to the account of Sigebertus, 1039.

51. C olomannus, King of the Hungarians, reſolving with himſelf to deſtroy by fire Jadera, a City of Dalmatia, for her frequent revolts, dreamed, that Nicolas who in times paſt had been a Biſhop of the Jaderenſians, appearing to him, (for the wickedneſs which he in his mind had determined) caught him by the hair of the head, and ſcourged him heavily with a golden whip; inſomuch, that awaking, he both felt and ſaw the marks of his beating. Therefore though Jadera was a City given much to ſeek after innovations, he winked at their folly, and ſuffered them therein without moleſtation. Bonfinius, lib. 5. Decad. 2.

Saint Bernard coming to Spira, read in the Statue of the blessed Virgin these consecrated Inscriptions; Oh Clement, O free, oh holy Mary, mother. Then presently as they report, a voyce out of the Statue said, God save you, Bernard. But he suspecting the Le-gerdemains of the Devil, answereth, Paul forbids a woman to speak in the Church. They say, this Image remains to this very day behind the walls of the Temple of Spira.

52.

Medericum, an Abbot at Edunum, put his cloak upon a Monk, burning with libidinous cogitations, whereby he was delivered from that misery, and the Devil, the provoker thereof, was heard, departing from him, to howl; and the Monk afterwards, according to his vow, continued undefiledly firm and constant, freed from so much as the least itch or lust of uncleanness. Another brother of the Society, gathering together, and taking the reliques from the table of Medericum, repressed the unquietness of his restless wandring mind; whereas formerly he had by the instigation of the Devil, been so far deluded, that he could by no means possible stay in the Church, but alwayes before Divine Service was done, he ran out of the Church. Marulus, lib. 5. cap. 7.

53.

Genovepha, when upon the Sabbath about the time of Cocks crowing, coming into the Church of Saint Dionysius, the Torch which was carried before her, was by chance put out, the Virgins in her company being much troubled thereat, lest they should thereby suffer filthiness or horror, she commands the Torch to be delivered to her; which as soon as it was but touched by her sacred hands, lighted of it self; which, carried to the sick and languishing, cured most of them. Bonfinius, lib. 5. Decad. 1.

54.

Pope Leo the fourth quenched a fire by the sign of the cross, which had long raged, destroying many houses of the Saxons and Longobards, and was making towards the Church of Saint Peter, when he extinguish'd it upon the eighth day from the Assumption of the blessed Mother of God, which day ever after was kept holy, not far from the Temple of St. Lawrence without the walls.

55.

VVhen in the time of Pope Calixt, there was such a huge & exceeding fire, having consumed almost all the City, and imminently appearing to be ready to seize upon the Monastery, the Monks took the corporal of the Challice, which thrown into the fire, it most miraculously was forced to retreat, not daring to proceed further; besides, the Citizens saw a certain hand which drove back the fire from the Monastery. The violence of the fire had no power at all to burn the corporal, or do it any hurt at all. Chron. Cassinense.

56.

57. WHen, for fear of the Normans, the reliques of Martin were translated to Antisiodorum, the Monks disagreed amongst themselves; some of them contending, that the Temple should be called Martin's Church; and others, the Church of Liborius, who had first been worshipped there; whereupon, a leprous man is placed betwixt the Statues of the Saints, and prayers are made with great devotion, that they would exercise their power; whereupon a voyce out of the Tomb of Martin, saith, Thou art made whole by me from thy Leprosie on the one side, the other I leave to my brother Liborius to heal; for strangers ought alwayes to be honoured. Then the sick man turning himself to Liborius, his other side was immediately cured. Platina, in vita Stephani.

58. ABout the year of our Lord, 1016, certain Monks returning from Jerusalem, brought a small part of the towell wherewith our Lord wiped the feet of his Apostles before his last Supper, to Castinum; It not being believed by many, certain men, superstitiously desiring to prove the truth, cast it upon hot burning coals: whereupon it presently put on the colour of linnen; but as soon as it was taken out of the fire, it received its former form. Chron. Cassinese, lib. 2. cap. 34.

59. WHen at a certain Feast at Bononia, a Cock was dressed, served up to the table, and carved with much art, one of the guests said, It is impossible Saint Peter should restore this Cock thus carved, to life again; immediately upon his words, the Cock leapeth up, restored to life, and clapping his wings together, scatters the broth which was in the dish, into the faces of them who sat at the table; the blasphemer was immediately punish'd with an hereditary Leprosie. Vincentium, lib. 25. cap. 64.

60. THe Bishop of Alexandria, a very religious man, had a certain Philosopher to his neighbour, named Evagrius, addicted to the Grecian superstition, who had been Schoolfellow to the Bishop; this man, the Bishop desiring to convert from his foolish worshiping of false gods to the faith of Christ, called him often to him, and disputed with him; but the Philosopher more and more averse to the Christian faith, (as 'tis reported) spoke to the Bishop in these words; Verily, reverend Bishop, besides other things, which I dislike of your opinion, I can by no means approve of the judgment of you Christians, who say, That the end of the world is to be, and that all dead bodies shall then arise, and that every one shall have reward at the last for every good deed which he hath done; he that moved with mercy giveth to the poor, lendeth it to God, and shall receive it an hundred fold, and life everlasting. The Bishop, excellently affirming and proving, that nothing of the Christian Religion was vain; Evagrius departed not yet fully satisfied in his mind: But after a while, Almighty God joyning with the

the Bishop's doctrine, he believed, and was baptized; and being rich, he brought to the Bishop three hundred pounds in gold, to distribute to the poor; but upon this condition, that he should give it under his own proper hand in writing, that Almighty God would restore it. The Bishop received the money, and giving him a writing under his hand, (as he desired) divided the money amongst poor people that were in great necessity. The Philosopher having for some years led a godly life, lying upon his death-bed, commanded his children, that when he should be dead, they should put this writing into his hand, and so bury him; which being performed accordingly, the Bishop the third night after in his sleep saw Evagrius, who spoke to him thus; Reverend Bishop, come to my grave, and receive thy writing, for my debt is paid me an hundred fold; but that it may more plainly appear to thee, I have subscribed it with mine own hand. Early in the morning the Bishop sent for his sons, and when he perceived by them that the writing was buried with Evagrius, he went with the Clark of the City to the Sepulchre, which opening, they found the Philosopher sitting, and reaching out his hand with the Paper in it: which when the Clarks would have received, he refused to deliver to any of them; but to the Bishop extending his hand, he delivered it, and so lay in his Sepulchre in peace, the Bishop shewing openly the writing in the sight of all men, thus newly subscribed; Evagrius the Philosopher, to the most holy Bishop Sinelius, My very good Lord; Know holy Father that I have received an hundred fold what I delivered to you; and therefore I have sent you this writing with my hand and name subscribed, to shew that I can require nothing from you. Which when it had been read to the people, he commanded the scedule subscribed by the hand of the Philosopher, to be safely set up and kept in the Library. Cedrenus.

AT Constantinople, in the Monastery of the holy Mother of God, in the Church near the Sepulchre of Holy Sopina, the Image of the blessed Virgin Mary holding an Infant in her arms which Saint Luke had limned in a table in the life time of the Virgin Mary, was placed. This picture is called Odigatria; that is, a leader or conductor, because she appeared to two blind men, and led them to her Church, and there restored to them their sight: the Citizens of Constantinople besieged by the Saracens upon a Tuesday made procession with this Image the whole day throughout; fasting, praying, and fighting; at the same time, a certain Citizen advised them that they ought to fetch that Image, and all of them unanimously to pray to her in this manner. Holy Mother of God, who hast so often delivered us, now save us from the enemies of thy Son; If it be thy pleasure, thy Image should not be drown'd in the Sea, overwhelm the enemies therein, which when he had said he privily thrust the Image under water, and there holds it, and immediately thereupon there arose such a violent storm that drowned some,

61.

some, and broke into splinters the rest of the Ships of the Sarazens, so that they were all destroyed.

62. E Vagrin out of Procopius tells us that a Citizen of Adeffa, in despair to defend their City against Cosroes the Persian, sent the picture or Image of Christ which he himself had made, to Abbagarus; who when the City was ready to be taken, drew the Image to the ditch of the City, and threw it into the water, against the enemies piles; Which done, the works of wood, and heaps which Cosroes had made for his foot-Souldiers to go upon, being presently burnt, were reduced into ashes.

63. T He people strawing hearbs upon the Tomb of Nicecius the Lugdunensian Bishop; Aigulphus coming from Rome, brought some of them with him, which a Priest bestowed upon him, which giving to one in a draught of cold water, who was visited with a Fever, he presently recovered his health. Gregarius Turonensis.

64. T He same Author, cap. 34. de gloria Confessorum, tells us of a wonderfull Revelation of Valerius the Cosoranensian Bishop: he saith that Theodore, the Bishop finding two Sepulchres, and doubting whether belonged to Valerius; watching a whole night, he invoked Valerius that he would please to declare and manifest to him the place wherein he was buried, taking two Vessells of Wine and placing them before the Sepulchres, he said, which of these two shall be augmented or fuller with Wine, it will thereby appear a manifest testimony, that the Sepulchre of Valerius is placed by it: the day following, he found one of the Vessels running over with Wine, which was placed by the Tomb of Valerius.

65. I T being told Ebronius Master of the Horse in France, that at the Sepulchre of Leodegarius, Miracles were wrought, he sent a Souldier thither to search out the truth of the report, who spurning the place with his feet; saith, My Wife doth miracles as my breech singeth: which done, ever after as oft as he spoke, he farted, and stunk most abominably. Martinus in Chronico feria sexta id maxime fieri solitum ait; and that thereby the Woman his Wife became so resolute a Christian, that she was afterwards a Martyr; and that King Pipin sending for the Woman, and inquiring of the truth hereof, was fully satisfied, that it was according to this relation. Vincentius, Book 23, Chapter 159. Et Epherdienfis, Chapter 59. referunt.

Uladislaus first King of the Polonians taking to Wife Judith, daughter to Uratisslaus King of Bohemia, who having been long barren, advised by the Bishop of Cracovia, sent Messengers to the Monastery of Saint Egidius in the Province of Narbo, where the body of that dead Saint lay, with magnificent gifts, whereupon there was a time set apart for three dayes fast, which the Monks were to observe, and spend in prayer to Almighty God, that for the merits and intercession of his gracious servant Egidius, he would grant an heir male to the Princeesse. The third day of their fast, it was revealed by Vision to a certain pious Monk, that Almighty God had granted what they had with so much zeal and devotion desired; the Messengers therefore, sent away assured hereof, when they returned, found the Princeesse great with child, who afterwards was maturely brought to bed of a gallant young Prince, to whom they gave in Baptism the name of Boleslaus. Judith four Moneths after died, who gave, being a most bountifull and pious Lady, all the Jewels, Moneys, and estate in her power to bestow, to the relief of the poor; and the adorning of Temples whilst she was living. Cromerus, lib. 5.

66.

When the body of Vedastus the Attrebatensian Bishop was translated from the place, wherein times past it was laid, a blind man, named Audomarus, desired of Almighty God by prayer that he might see the bones of the Saint, and forthwith he received his sight, and praying shortly after, if his sight did any way hinder the health of his Soul, that his infirmity might return, he was again struck blind. Merul. lib. 5. cap. 4.

67.

Methodius, Patriarch of Constantinople, was pursued with much hatred by his enemies for his worshipping of Images, who corrupting a notorious common Whore with a sum of Money which they gave her, caused her to accuse him that he had ravished her, and that before the chief of the whole Senate: all which he bore with admirable patience, till they ordered that the Holy man, before Manuel and many of the chief of the Senate, should be admitted to no other purgation, but having spoke some few words removing that part of his cloathing which covered his privities, he should shew his members to them, which done, they appeared withered and mortified, whereby it was obvious to all men that he was utterly incapable of Venerie; which to the Orthodox was great cause of rejoycing, and of sorrow to Sycophants and calumniators: And when the Holy man was asked whether sicknesse had been the cause that his members were so weakned, not without a modest shame he answered, that in time past when he lived at Rome he was by the Devill instigated to the lust of the flesh, by the often burning flames of love, which daily growing and increasing in him and he fearing lest he should lose his resolved continency and chaste life, he invoked the holy Apostles Peter and Paul, that they would help help him in this combat, and praying incessantly to this purpose, In the night, saith he, in my sleep I saw two men standing by me, one whereof touched my privy parts with his hand, saying to me, Be of good heart, thy fire of lust shall be suddenly asswaged, who seemed so to burn my privy parts, that with the extream pain thereof I awaked. Rising from sleep, I found my privities enfeebled, and almost mortified, from which time I was never troubled with fleshly lust. Cosplan.

68.

70. A Gaitha, Virgin and Martyr, after many torments which she suffered by Tyrannus, for that he could not move her from her steadfast faith, caused her breast to be torn in pieces, and afterwards cast her into prison woefully hurt and wounded, being visited by the Apostle Peter, on purpose to cure her, she conceiving him to be some Surgeon that came to her, refused his help, and said, The Lord Jesus is my Physician, who by his onely Word is able to cure all my infirmities, and I have never in my life used any worldly help or Physick to my body. Then the Apostle Peter declaring to her who he was, and that he was sent by our blessed Saviour to her, leaving her made whole, and cured of all her hurts and wounds, vanished from her. Marulus, lib. 5. cap. 4.

71. IN the reign of Philip Diodorus about the year of our Lord, 1182; when there was a deadly Warr betwixt the Rothomagenian King, and the Earls of Br Agidius, and no possible humane means could put an end therunto, a certain poor man named Durandus, of an obscure place named Podium, a Carpenter by Trade, working in a Wood, the Mother of God appeared to him; and gave him a small piece of parchment, upon which was pictur'd the Virgin and her Sonne; and in the margent thereof was written in Latin, Lamb of God grant us peace. He enjoying him, as he said, that he should declare the same to the men in arms, and that he should command them to put an end to their civill and unnatural Warr, and that in the Name of Almighty God, credit being given to his speech, and a peace concluded, there were many Images made in imitation of his, which those that carryed in their hats, securely and safely without hurt, fought in battle, and likewise were upon their march or journey refreshed thereby, as much as if they had all necessary provision, they supplying the want of all. Fulgosus, lib. 1. cap. 1. continuator Sigesberti.

72. D Agobertus, son of Clotharius the second King of France, being very young, pulled from Sadregisillum, an excellent and worthy Nobleman, who was designed by his father to be prefect of Aquitane, his honourable ornament belonging to his place, and grievously beat him, for that he conceived that he had not that reverent observation from him which belonged to the son of a King, being offended in the first place, that he set himself frequently over against him at the Table when he feasted, and that forgetting his his Majestie by wine, he took from his hand the cup, which is not used but amongst equals, and freely drunk in it. Whereupon the Nobleman went presently to the King, and shewed to him his deformed mouth, and lacerated back, with the fresh marks of all his blowes: whereat being enraged, he commanded, that his sonne should be taken and brought to him; the young man fearing the anger of his father, flees, and from one secret place to another, absconds himself from his fury: at last, the King having but one onely son, and thinking with himself, that he had done sufficient Penance for his offence, by his long fear and flight, resolves to forgive him, and be reconciled to him; those whom the King sent to Catullarus, Governour of the Parisians, who were to fetch his son out of the Cave wherein he absconded himself, when they came thither, were taken with such fear and horreur, that the hairs of their head standing upright, and all the parts of their bodies trembling, they had no power to go into the Cave; his father supposed, that they, to gratifie his son, who was to reign after him, were unwilling to perform his command, lest his son should be angry with them: and therefore he presently pronounceth his son's pardon, that they might go into the Cave to fetch him to him. In this place, far in the ground, lay buried the bodies of the Martyrs Dionysius Rusticus, and Eleutherius, which to that day was not known to any man, who appearing to Dagobert in his sleep, advised him to vow the building of a Church there, which he afterwards performed, bestowing upon it great endowments, and magnificently adorning it.

They say, a certain woman delivered her sins in writing to Basil the Great, supplicating him to pray to Almighty God for the forgiveness of them; he accordingly imploring remission of her sins, all were blotted out of the writing, except one more grievous then the rest; wherefore the woman was sent to Ephem the Hermite; but by reason he was dead, she returned (having as she conceived, laboured in vain) to Basil, who understanding that he dyed that day, after the womans abundant pouring forth of tears, he putting the paper to the breast of the dead man, who was laid upon the ground, findeth, when presently he took it away, that the remaining unblotted sin, when he there put it, was now clean blotted out. Marulus, lib. 1. cap. 16.

73.

At Winton in England, in the year of our Lord, 975, Elferus, Prince of the Marches, defended the married Priests against the Monks, which observed the vow of Virginity; the Monks not able to defend their cause by Scripture, used the assistance of Dunstan Archbishop of Canterbury, who not being able either by Scripture to maintain, That Priests ought to vow Virginity; therefore all his endeavours to confute them, they esteemed in vain; at length during this hot contest, the Image of Christ hanging upon a wall, spake words to this purpose; They are mistaken, that take part with the married Priests; by which Miracle most men were satisfied, that the chaste Monks were in the right; others thought, that this Image was caused to speak by magicall incantation, as they said; whereupon the married Priests inviting Eltheredus the Bishop out of Scotland, who whilst he and they were vigorously defending their cause against the Monks, the room falling upon their heads, most of the Priests were slain, and the rest hurt, but Dunstane standing upon a beam of the room, was preserved from hurt, and the Monks were likewise safe and sound, whereby Dunstane received victorious honour. But it was said by many, that this came to pass by witchcraft. Mamelburiensis, lib. 2. Ranulphus, lib. 6. cap. 11. Polydorus, lib. 6.

74.

part

75.

Clodoveus, King of France, converted to the Christian Faith, by the advice of his Nobility, raised a Warr against the West Goths, not onely because they had incroached some of the Territories of France, but for that they were also assertors of the Arrian Heresie; when therefore Clodoveus was strenuously opposed by his enemies, and put into some danger by battle, he promised by vow, that he would offer to St. Martin his horse whereon he rode, if he obtained the victory; he was not unmindfull, when he had overcome his enemies, of his Vow, but resolving to give an hundred pieces of gold in lieu of his horse towards the adorning of St. Martin's Temple, his horse would not be moved out of the place wherein he stood, till he gave two hundred, and then his horse moved as freely as ever; whereupon the King merrily said, I see Saint Martin is ready to help in distress, but strict in requiring the full value of what is vowed. Johannes Magnus, lib. 16. cap. 2.

76.

VHen Luitprandus, King of the Longobards, was endeavouring to translate the reliques of St. Austin out of Sardinia, which was wasted by the Saracens, in his journey at a certain Town in the Therdonensian Diocess, his Coach stopped for upon a sudden, that by no art he could use, it would be moved: he made a solemn vow, That if Austin would propitiously hear and cause his bones to be carried to Ticinum, he would give that Town for the maintenance of Priests, and men appointed for Divine worship; the Saint hearing his request, caused the Coach to be drawn with much facility. Vincentium, lib. 23. cap. 148. Sigebertus translationis illius meminit anno Dom. 721.

77.

Adelbertus, Bishop of Bohemia, visited with a most grievous Feavour from his childhood, was brought to the Temple of St. Mary the Virgin, and being pronounced by his Parents, as dedicated by a vow to Religion if he should recover his health, he immediately was freed from his disease. Bonfinium, l. 2. Decad. 2.

Genadium, Patriarch of Constantinople, having often rebuked a certain Priest of the Church of St. Eleutherius, for that he by an evil life disgraced his profession; and not being able by any means he could use to reform him, he at last in the Temple complained to St. Eleutherius, of the wickedness of this Clark, and saith, Saint and Martyr, Eleutherius, either reform and amend thy Clark, or cut him off, that he may no longer disgrace his profession. Cedrenus.

78.

Gregorius Turonensis (de gloria confessorum, cap. 97.) scribit. When Hospitius was buried, a certain man took some of the dust of his Sepulchre, and wrapping it in a linnen cloath, carried it with him, intending to bring it to the Lirinenſian Monastery; and taking ship, he sailed towards the said Monastery; upon a suddain the Ship stood as immoveable in the midst of the vaste Sea, as a rock, at which the Jews, to whom the Ship belonged, wondring, and much amazed, he declared to them, that he had with him the reliques of Hospitius; and now they might perceive, that those were the cause that the Ship would not stirr, unless they would steer their course to the Lyrinenſian Monastery; where he was to place the holy reliques.

79.

When the body of Boniface, Bishop of Moguntinum, slain by the Pagans, was carried to the Fuldenſian Monastery through Frisia, all the fields without any humane agitation, resounded with an unwonted harmonious Eccho. Scribit Werneius in fasciculo temporum: et Mutius, lib. 7. de Germania.

80.

An eleven hundred Virgins martyred by the Huns, their bodies were brought to the publick Church; whereupon, when a certain Priest had obtained the body of one of the Virgins, that he might translate it to his Church, moved thereunto by zealous devotion; whilst they were at Mattins, she resuming her body, and appearing as she had been alive, to the great wonder of the whole Colledge of Priests, who beheld it, worshipping the great Altar, immediately departed; the chief of the Society comming therefore to the Tomb, could not find the Virgin who was laid therein. At these Altars, innumerable solemne vows were made, and wonderfull Tables, wherein the people did write their voices, were fastned on the walls with folding doors. As a certain German, who was addicted to the religion of these people, when he was very sick, one of them came to him when he was at rest, and did let him know, That if he would say the Lords Prayer 11000 times, he should not want the help and protection of so many Virgins at the hour of death. Bonfinius, lib. 5. Decad. 1.

81.

82. IN the times of the Hanni, (a people that came out of Sythia to live in Hungary) while that S. Servatius, the Bishop of Trajectum, did offer sacrifice, the top of the house was presently opened, and a very high Pillar of fire hanged out of Heaven even to the very Tomb, which not onely the Citizens, but the borderers also, and very many strangers did see. Wherefore they began to worship this most potent man, and reckon him among the gods. They did never intend to cover his Sepulchre, which was placed in the middle of the house, with the roof. And although they did perform their Divine duties there in the clear day, and did receive their Oracles, yet there was never any rain or hail, snow or tempest wanting at these sacrifices. Ronsinum, libro 6. capite eodem.

83. DAgobertus the King of France, erected the Temple of Sr. Dionysius from the foundation, taking away from all others, and spoiling them, whereby he might enrich this alone; neither was any of his predecessors found, who gave so magnificent and excessive yearly revenues to Temples out of their patrimony. He covered the Temple of Dionysius onely with silver, and he made the bodies of the Saints to be placed there, covered with beaten gold, and having added many rich gifts, insomuch, that that Temple was sometimes his defence against the anger of his Father, when the officers, which would draw him thence at the command of his Father, being astonished, stood before the Temple with their feet so fastned, that they could not enter. But the dedication of that Temple was wonderful: For a certain Leper that lay all that night in the same Temple, did report to the high Priests which came together to the dedication, That he saw Christ, and other Saints dedicating the Temple. And Christ commanded him, that he should relate that which he had seen, to the High Priests which came thither to the dedication; and lest happily the belief of this thing should be desired, he would shew that sign, that he should be cleansed of his Leprosie; and the skin which was full of sores by the swellings of that disease, should be wholly taken away from his face. Therefore they not onely give credit to him, but also the High Priests abstained from the dedication. But for the memory of the thing, the skin was also taken from the face of the Leper, which being hidden in a golden box was shewed, and a day every year was celebrated among the yearly Festivals. Falgosus, lib. 1.

84. Enoepta, a Virgin of Paris, did most reverently frequent the Village Catala, where the holy Dionysius dyed, to whom she dedicated a Cathedrall Church. She humbly went to the Colledge of the Priests, that they might build a Temple with the collected money. But their poverty verty and want of Sand did alledge an excuse. On the contrary, she being carried by Divine inspiration, said, I beseech you, go out to the bridge of the City, and whatsoever you hear, declare it to me. They being gone out, while they stood attentively in the Market-place, if they might hear any thing, behold, two Swineherds coming towards them, talked together. The one said, Whilest I did seek after the footsteps of a strayed hogg, I found a very great furnace of Lime. I also (said the other) found it likewise in a wood. The amazed Priests did relate to the Virgin those things which they had heard. But she did shed tears for joy; which when it was demonstrated to the Citizens, a magnificent Temple was erected with the collected money, and dedicated to Dionysius. Truly, holy prodigies were not wanting at building of the Cathedral Church. For when drink did fail the Carpenters, she took a wine-vessel, which (when she had prayed to the Deity) she hallowed with the sign of the Cross; by and by she gave it full to the Labourers. The Divinity alwayes renewing it with the like excessive abundance, to quench their thirst, even untill she had finished the work. Bonfinius, lib. 5. Decad. 1.

WHEN the first Founders of Venice (which they say were the Citizens of Patauium in Pontus) had builded some Cottages, and had not as yet dedicated a Temple to any Deity, suddenly a fire breaking out of the Master-Workmen's house in the night, the fire being continued, consumed 24 houses; the wind and fuel scattered all abroad, nourishing the flames. The multitude having turned themselves to prayers, did bequeath a Temple to St. James. The fire at the very same instant departed, and houses were erected by their prayers. Equatius, lib. 6. cap. 5.

85.

ABOUT the year of Grace, 1516, Balihasar Habmeyerus, a Divine at Regenspurgh, at his Conventions he so enflamed the Magistrates against the Jews, that their Congregation being cut off, they might build the Temple of the divine beautiful Virgin Mary in the same Ark. Which when it was said to exhibit I know not what Miracles, the same thereof being stretched out far and wide through Germany, so great a concourse of strangers suddenly began to be, that neither the Temple, nor the Monastery, and scarcely the City it self, unless truly the large Palace of the King, could suffice to great a company of vile, wicked persons. Thence the fury encreased, when as a certain Ratisbonian incidently remembered the beautiful Virgin Mary so much, that being snatcht away as it were in an extasie, did strive night and day to come straightway to her with a restless course, leaving behind him Parents, Wife, and Children, neither saluting nor acknowledging those which he met in his Journey. Neither truly could he be compelled with threatnings or bonds. The people being enraged, (for this madness had almost driven the common people and Tradesmen) snatcht with them the instruments of their Art which were next to hand, did bring them to the Image instead of an offering, to be hung up in the Temple. Thou mightest have seen women leading Children, old men leaning on their staves, Children reaching a crust of bread or an apple, instead of a gift; the sick drawing near with their sheets and coverings; dumb, deaf, and blind with their eyes open; in the mean time, being unmindful of meat, drink, or sleep. Having entered the Temple, all were not affected with one and the same manner; but those who had attained to the highest point of Grace, according as the Mass-Priests perswaded: as soon as they saw a beautifull Image, they sat down without any word speaking, like men stricken with the Planet: being come to themselves, they professed all together with fury, That they were healed of their diseases. This perswasion made many, with a desire to excell in superstition, to cast themselves, at the entrance of the Temple, on the ground. When the Edict of the Senate did severely punish this insolence of immoderate worship, whether it was done by the revenge of the Deity, or the wrath of the Devil, whereby that seducing Dreamer (who for eight years and more, had made the credulous Germans mad) might perish together with his miracles. There are some which think it was done by the fraud of the Jews; others, by the deceit of them which should have the greatest gain by this peregrination: This authority was purchased to that place by magick art, which the worship of the Image, and the minds of the people being once deluded by superstition, encreased and enlarged. Be it as it is, most men of Judgment, and true Catholics, judged, that these were Magical and Diabolical signs, rather then Divine. Sebast. Francus in Chronicis.

86.

87. L Ampertus, a Knight of Lovain in Brabant, did bear a full of the Reliques of Saints hanging down from his neck even into his breast, and he believed that this was a safe protection against all kinds of dangers. But in the Battel against the Duke Godfrid, that enchantment fell from his neck into the field: and presently after the Knight (before invincible) was killed, in the year, 1015. But a certain Souldier, having known the preservative against bewitching, hid it in his house. But the thing was betrayed by the swelling of his huckle-bone and thigh. Therefore it was delivered to Echelan the brother of the slain Knight. Sigebertus, in Chronico.

88. The Metensian Bishop performing the Government of the Clergy-men, in the stead of Poppo of Treueris, (a City of Germany) who was gone into Palesina, made a nail very like the Altar of the Lord, and hid it in his bosome, which he did restore, although swimming in blood, and shut up the earth, which was shaved away with the blood, in Crystill. Catalogus Treuerensis.

Constantine the Emperour, did alwayes adore the nayles of Christ being crucified, which were given him by Helena his Mother, he fastned one to the Crest of his helmet, he made a bridle for his horse with the other, (which may be seen at Mediolanum to this day) having confidence, that in the help of these, he should eschew all dangers of his life. But what is more wicked, then that thou shouldst ascribe those things to the iron, which belong to the most high God? Fulgosius, lib. 1. cap. 2. de cultu divino ex Ambrosio.

89.

Pope Gregory II. sent three holy Sponges, to Eudon the great Duke of Aquitan, which were wont to be used at his table. He distributed them, being cut in pieces, to his army, which he did conduct against the Saracens; and it happened, that none of them which did partake of it, were wounded or slain. Eudon's epistola ad Gregorium, in lib. Pont.

90.

A Monk of the Roman Convent, which being a boy, was delivered by his Parents to an Abbot, where he did offer sacrifice, and leaving his Religion, he married a Wife. But being sick of the Quinsie, he was brought back into the Monastery, receiving the habit, and repentance, and he was beaten cruelly with whips, by St. Andrew and Gregory, for his faults committed. Hence leaping out of his bed, he put on a garment made of Goats-hair, and another that was to cast over his shoulders, and having entered the Temple of St. Andrew, he said to the standers by; Behold, I being so purified by the stripes of the Saints, I depart out of my body, as formerly I issued out clean by baptism. And dyed, while they were mustering a Soul-mass for the dead. Vincenius, lib. 25. cap. 57.

91.

A Certain man of Colonia, (an Ile in the Argolick Gulph) born of a Jew his father, but being converted, when he perceived the body of our Lord in the Paschall Feast, he carryed it whole (I know not for what use) in his mouth home with him. But he being affrighted with the Divinity, did bury it in the Church-yard. The Priest came suddenly upon him by chance, and discrying what was done, having opened the pit, he found the form of a Child; which when he halted to carry it to the Church, it vanished into the thin Air. Trithemius in Hirsaugiensi Chronico.

92.

A Certain infamous woman, at the yearly solemnization of the Passeeover, at Castrum, (which is called, The golden Mountain) when she perceived the body of our Lord in her mouth, she shur it up whole in her chest at home. A little after, when one of her Lovers by chance opened it, he found the sacrifice (as they call it) of our Lord's body, changed into the shape of flesh and blood, in the year of our Lord, 1181. Sigeberti continuator. By these delusions Saran doth strive to confirm the Popish fiction of Transubstantiation.

93.

In

94. IN the year of Christ, 1345, when certain men consecrated a sacrifice, they did steal the memories of all the Saints, with their own dish, which was dedicated, out of the Temple; and because they found the dish not gold, (as they believed) but brass gilded, they cast it into a filthy Pond at the Village Bubalum, near the City of Cracovia. Presently the place shined with frequent fires, and little fire-brands some dayes and nights continually. When that miracle was presented to the Bishop, not as yet discovering the cause thereof, after he had proclaimed a three dayes fast, when he went thither with an annual Pomp: and having found the Eucharist there, he brought it thither, from whence it was carried. But in the very same place where it was found, Cazimir II. King, did build a magnificent Temple with exceeding rich walls, entiruled, The body of Christ, and in process of time environing a very large space of ground with a wall, he built a new City, and called it Cazimira, after his own name. Cromerus, lib. 12.
95. Jonathas Judem of Bruxells (a famous City of Brabant) in the year of Christ, M. CCC. LXIX. redeemed certain sacrifices (as they call them) dedicated to Holy Katherine, and being slain in a Garden by the assault of his enemies, he left them to his Wife to keep, and she to her son Abraham; who on Friday in the Holy Congregation of the Jews, having chosen out his sacrifice, he pierced it, and did tear it in pieces. But abundance of blood proceeding, the Mother of Abraham being converted, divulged the miracle. Wencislavus the Duke of Brabant, having made diligent search, he took care, that Abraham and his associates should be burned alive before the Temple of holy Katherine, and religiously placed the sacrifice in the Cathedral Temple of Saint Gudula. Ludovicus Guicciardinus, in descriptione Germaniae inferioris.
96. HERETOFORE the Rule of the Mass for the soul of the dead was sang openly, and with a loud voice. But Pope Vigilius instituted, That it should not be performed but in a holy place, in holy garments, and a low voice. It happened once, as Shepherds, having put bread ridiculously upon a stone in the field, rehearsed the words of the Canon, by which it was transubstantiated: and so suddenly seeing bloody humane flesh before them, and stricken by the appointment of God, they presently dyed. Hermannus Gygas.
97. WHEN the bodies were thought to rest in their graves, the earth would be carried out of the vault of the Temple of Paulinus at Treueris, where the Theban Legions were killed by Ridicnarius Maximianus, heretofore Lieutenant to the Emperour, a certain head being cast forth by the Priest unwarily, did bleed excessively, and remains bloody even to this day. Schaffnaburgensis, Anno 1072.

Regino doth declare, that Clodoveus, King of France, because that irreligiously he plucked the body of Dionysius out of his grave, and broke his arm, and snatched him with violence; presently being astonished, fell mad, and after two years lost his life and Kingdom. Idem Adon Vienneſis etate 6. & Nantlerius generatione 23. Sigebertus circa annum Domini, 660.

98.

Herw Boethius doth relate, That if any woman kicked the Tomb of a blessed woman at Guano in Scolland, she ever after remained barren. Cardanus de Rerum Diffetate, lib. 8. cap. 44.

99.

A Certain woman which had carried the shoes of holy Genovepha to Luettia, suddenly lost her eyes, and having begged pardon, received her sight. Bonfinius, lib. 5. Decad. 1.

100.

When a Robber came to the Tomb of Wenceslaus IV. the honourable King of the Bohemians, upbraiding the dead man's life, a stony Statue put upon the Sepulchre gave him a buffet, and presently being smitten blind, he suffered for his wickedness. Afterwards the Statue was laid in the privy Chappel, and another Brazen one was put in the place thereof. Aeneas Sylvius, capite 18. Histor. Bohem.

101.

A Certain Constantine, the overthrower of Artabazus, seeing the Image of the God-bearing Virgin standing, having caught up a stone, he threw it at the Image, and brake it, and when it fell, kick'd it. And he saw her in his sleep standing by him, and saying, Dost thou know how audacious a fault thou hast committed against me? but it will fall on thy own head. On the morrow the Saracens defending the walls, and the battel being joyned, he miserable wretch running to the wall, being struck on the head and face with a hurled stone, he had a punishment according to the deserts of his wickedness. Paulus Diaconus, lib. 21. Rerum Rom. & Cedrenus.

102.

Constantine the Bishop of Cyprus in the 4th edition of Nicens the second, doth declare; That a certain heardefman, who had pulled out the right eye of the Image of Mary with a prick; afterwards going out into the field, when he struck the cattel, his own eye dropt out. And there was another certain man in Cizium, (a Town of Cyprus) because that he had driven a nail thorough the head of the same Image painted upon a wall, had a mighty pain in the head, which he could be in no wise eased of before that he had drawn out the nail. Also the same man doth affirm, That an Agarene endeavouring to pluck out the eye of the Image of Mary, with a long Spear in the City Gabala of Syria, digged out his own eye, and was tormented with a burning Feaver. And in the 5th edition; yet other 3 miracles are published, which were executed by Images, 103.

to

to confirm the worship of them, which Charls the Great in his booke of the worship of Images, doth refer it to the force of superstition.

104.

A Certain Jew having received baptism in Hannonia, being lifted up from the holy fountain by William a Knight of Holland, returning with the Dog to his vomit, he smote the Image of the Virgin Mary in the Temple, privily with a punnard in the face, abundance of blood gushed out, The Jew prepared himself for flight. The Virgin did appear to a Smith in a Dream, doth shew him the author of the mischief, doth exhort him to pursue him, and offering a duell to convince him of his wickedness. He doth obey, and by single combat doth drive the conquered Jew to the Cross. Johannes Trithemius in Chronico Hirsaugiensi.

105.

Whilest a peace was contracting between Henry and Philip, the Kings of England and France, certain Officers being brought in from Richard son of Henry King of England, which that Age called Coterelli, while they played at dice, a certain man having lost his money, seeing the Virgin in the Porch of the Temple, holding her son in her right hand, throwing a stone at the Image, he broke a part of her son's arm, from whence blood plentifully flowing, it proved a remedy to many sick people, who dayouely sought help thereby; the Officer being taken away by the Devil, dyed most miserably the same day. Robertus Gaguinus, lib. 6.

106.

THe sixth year of King Charls, the Frenchmen took a Town called Burburgum, and having broken into the Temple, a French Souldier seeking to lay hold upon a silver Image of St. John, it is reported, That the Statue turning to him, he fell mad, and killed himself with his own teeth. Robertus Gaguinus.

107.

At Buda, a City of Pannonia, two Gamesters meeting together, the one said he playd in the Name of God; and the other, in the name of the Devil: he which made God by his vain words, a favourer of his wickedness, lost not onely all his money, but his cloaths also; and going towards home about mid-night, desperately enraged by his loss, as he went through a Church-yard, thus possessed with anger and fury, looking upon the Image of our Saviour crucified upon a Cross, he snatcheth up a stone, and strikes it into the face of the Crucifix, which making a hole therein, stuck fast in it; whereupon great store of blood miraculously issued thence: a Burcher who was troubled with the Gout, living close to the Church-yard, being an old man, and in his bed, heard a low voyce, which bid him rise, and strike with his great knife whomsoever he should meet; which words, when they had been thrice re-iterated, and that with threats of much mischief to befall him, if he refused, he resolved to obey the voyce. Therefore when at first he was not able to rise out of his bed, by reason of his infirmity, at length, slowly rising, he layes hand on his slaughter-knife, and going to the Church-yard,

Church-yard, meets the wretched mad Gameſter coming towards him, and thruſts his knife into him; which done, coming to the houſe of the Judge, he deſires to ſpeak with him: The Judge at firſt believed it to be meerly an impoſture of the Devil, though he declared to him his Dream, and the ſlaughter he had committed; but when it was light, coming to the Church-yard, whileſt the people flocked about the dead body, Devils with terrible howling ſnatching away the corps, carried it into the ayr in a trice out of the ſight of the ſpectators, which with the hole in the Crucifix, out of which blood iſſued, demonſtrated the perfidiouſneſs of the Gameſter, and freed the Butcher from danger. M. Friſchlin in Meteoris.

IN the year of our Redemption, 1383. there was in this Countrey, a certain fellow named Schelkrop, of mean Parentage, one of the infamous rout, who naturally was indued with a bold malignant wit, and by licentiousneſs and cuſtome was come to a great height of wickedneſs, wherein he not onely delighted, but gloried, he paſſed his time in Bawdy-houſes and Taverns, and with great eagerneſs followed Play; from whence all kind of vices ingender, as faſt as vermin from the putrefaction of a dead carcaſs; and eſpecially impiety towards God, is thereby begot. In all which, Schelkrop was ſo notorious a Captain, that the time wherein he lived could hardly parallell him. He upon a certain time, according to his cuſtome, tryed his fortune at play, having choyce of companions like himſelf, they went to a publick Gaming-houſe, a Tavern in the Suburbs of Moguntinum, called Filtsbach, the ſign of the flower, which was commonly called Zuder Blumen; and when they had for ſometime playd there at dice, it fell out, that Schelkrop was ſo unfortunate, that he had loſt almoſt all his money; which when by continuing of play, he did not onely not recover, but very much augmented his loſs, he began, as he was wont, not onely to vapour with his fellow Gameſters, and give them baſe and unhandſome language, but likewise moſt impiouſly to blaſpheme God and his Saints; ſome report, that when he was thus with rage and impiety incenſed, that he openly threatned, That whatſoever Image of our Saviour he firſt met withall, of it he would take revenge of his preſent loſs. But I will not confidently affirm it, but it appears plainly, that when he went from his companions, he came to a certain Chappel ſeated betwixt the Church of Saint Alban, and the Temple of the bleſſed Virgin, where Images were kept, and ſuddenly fiercely hacked and hewed the Image of our bleſſed Saviour crucified upon the Croſs, and that with one ſtroke he cut off the head thereof, ſo that it fell from the body, and that with the edge and point of his ſword he ſlaſt and thruſt many other Images of Saints which were placed by the Croſs, &c. Hitherto Schelkrop was mad with fury and rage; and what followes, will declare how miraculoſly divine revenge ſeized on him; for ſuddenly, dreadfully, and miraculoſly blood flowed from the cuts, slashes, and thrusts, that he had made in the Images, as if not Images made of wood, but living men had suffered that injury; and Schelkope now as one attain'd to the full measure of execrable impiety, stood still, not able to move a foot, till he was deprehended in his raging crime by passengers, that found him in the place where he had perpetrated that villany, for which they seized upon him, and brought him before the Magistrates, by whom he was most deservedly condemned to die, and accordingly was burnt in the sight of all the people, not far from the City, in the place which the people commonly call the Jews Sand, because they were used there to inter their dead. And the Images, famous by their hurts and the blood which issued from them, were translated by the hands of Priests, from that little Church, to the Temple of the Holy Cross; where to this day that dreadful blood is to be seen, and so religiously honoured, and many mortals variously afflicted, making vows to visit that place, have obtained of the most great and good God such mercy, as to be cured of their infirmities, and delivered from their afflictions. Theodoricus Gresmundus, legum doctor.

125.

109.

ANd although this impiety and petulancy of furious men is no way to be tolerated, but rather by Laws and punishments to be repressed, yet I believe, that, without doubt, these miracles were wrought by the fraud and imposture of the Devil, to confirm Idolatry in the hearts of men, by the worship and adoration of Images, by which they would confine God to dwell in trunks and stones; which Idolatry was most frequent, and to this day is in the Papacy. See concerning these signs and prodigies, Paul's latter Epistle to the Thessalonians, cap. 2. and seriously consider the Text.

110.

IN the twenty fourth year of Constantine, at Coprominum in Britum, the Image of Christ was contumeliously abus'd by the Jews, whereupon blood and water openly appeared to issue out of the side thereof, whereby many were cured of their infirmities: they putting it into vials sent of it all the World over, by reason whereof an Holy-day was instituted the fifth Ide of November, in remembrance of the Passion of the Image of Christ. Sigebert in the year of our Lord, 765, saith, The Fathers in the Nicene Council were of opinion, that this happened in the time of Athanasius, and that he particularly related and commended it to posterity. It was translated from Syria (as it is reported) rather by Divine then humane counsel. Sabellicus, lib. 9. Ennead. 8. et Cuspinianus.

111.

ACertain Jew in the time of Pope Pelagius, stealing the Image of our Saviour out of the Church, and thrusting it through with a weapon, carried it privately home with him; and being about to burn it when he perceived it bloodied, he was so amazed thereat, that he desists from his intent, and went and hid it; which the Christians seeking for it, found it by the track of blood which fell from from it as it was carried; for which fact they ſtoned the Jew to death. Sigebertus in Chron.

Otho and Philip contending in War for the Empire, many committed themſelves and their goods to the Temple of Saint Govarus, not far from Trevers, becauſe the place, as they conceived, was excellently well fenced both by nature and art. Whither Vernerus Bolanus coming to fight againſt it, the beſieged fearing leſt the enemy ſhould enter by a window, which they conceived the weakeſt part of the Church placed there, the Image of our Saviour upon a Croſs which was made of wood, whereby they thought they had ſufficiently ſecured it from the irruption of the enemy that way, a certain boy man ſyming at that place, ſhot his arrow into the Image of Chriſt, and preſently the blood flowed out of it, as if it had been a living body. Vernerus terrified therewith, takes the croſs, and threw it into the Sea to warr againſt the enemies of Chriſt, and the Image and Arrow was conſerved with the blood ſprinkled on them, notwithstanding. Fulgofus, lib. 1. cap. 6.

112.

Gregory the Great in his Epistle to Theodoſius, ſaith, That a certain Longobard of the Region of Transpadua, found a golden Key of Peter's, which he ſent as a great Preſent to the King of the Longobards, who cauſed it to be engraven on his ſword; which as ſoon as he made uſe of, ſtruck with Sataniſal fury, he cut his own throat with it, and dyed the ſame hour; Whence had Peter ſo precious a key; and to what purpoſe?

113.

Aldegifus, whom Pandulphus Prince of Capua commanded to go to Caffinum, and from thence to Planeta, and bring with him the Chalice of the Emperour, and other more precious ornaments of the Church as a pledge, whileſt he was about to endeavour to perform the command of his Maſter, at the Altar, before which he ſtood adorned, he fell upon his face, ſtruck with the Palſie and Falling ſickneſſe, becoming thereby a miſerable ſpectacle to the beholders; from which ſickneſſe, though he after a ſort recovered, yet his eyes and mouth continued pitiſfully diſtorted; and moreover, the Prince did not onely perſiſt in his enterpriſe of ſacriledg, but deſigned greater againſt the brethren, but after his death, a certain boy told to huntſmen, that he ſaw him tyed with Iron bonds, and drown'd up to the throat in a miery ſtinking Lake, and that by two ugly black ſpirits, he ſaw him one while caſt into the deep, and another while pulled out, the cauſe of ſuch horrid puniſhment inquired by the boy of him; he answered, It was, becauſe he had taken a golden Chalice out of the Monastery of St. Benediſt, and had neglected to reſtore it before his death, deſiring the boy to acquaint his Wife herewith, and with her to reſtore what goods were taken from the Monastery, which notwithstanding 114.

ing the woman being covinous, refused to perform. Chronicon; lib. 2. cap. 62.

115.

A Certain Hermite inhabiting in a Rock near an High-way of a Neapolitan Seigniorie, looking out at a window to see what time of the night it was, after he had said over the Nocturnal Psalms, saw a long rank of Blackmoors going loaded with straw, and threaming fire, who asking them, Who they were, they answered, That they were Devils, and they meant to bestow the combustible matter, they carried upon men, and that now they went for Pandolph Prince of Capua, who was a dying; in which very hour, as it afterwards appeared, Pandolph expired his life; and presently after, Vesuvius, a Mountain, vomited out such flames, that store of scorching Sulphur rising thence, appeared like a torrent, with great force and violence, discharging it self into the Sea. Chron. Cassinense; lib. 2. cap. 84.

116.

Urspergensis & Platina narrant, That John Baptist appeared to a certain rapacious and sacrilegious fellow, (who came to the Monument of Rotharis, King of the Longobards, in a Church built for the repose of his dead body, and took away all the ornaments wherewith it was buried,) and blamed him for his presumption to dare to touch his body; who although he had not walked in the strict way of truth, yet he had committed himself to his patronage and protection. By reason of this impiety, this sacrilegious person could never after go into the Temple; for as often as he assayed to enter thereinto, he was driven back by a ghost, which offered to cut his throat, if so be he proceeded; and so was forced to retreat.

117.

IN that Warr that Charls the Eighth, King of France, waged against Anne Dutchesse of Britain, whom afterwards he married, a certain Souldier of Britain going out of the City of Rhemes, to plunder, in the Temple of a certain Town, whereinto the Countrey people had brought the greatest part of their goods, he breaks open a Chest, thinking that it belonged to some secular person, and loading himself with as much as he could well carry of the goods therein, returning home with them, he looking amongst his plunder, saw amongst the rest certain small pieces of linnen cloath, like to handkerchiefs, and not conceiving that they were such as Priests use for a napkin to carry the host, he bestowed them on his Landlady; who perceiving them bloody, she first looked upon her hands; which when she found hurt, but could not perceive any blood issue from thence, she searched her bosome, and found all the skin of her breast, lining of her Wastcoat, and lower petticoat imbroydered with blood; the woman carrying these cloaths to the River to wash, could not possibly take the blood out of them, though by washing thereof, the water seemed bloody. Which is not

not unlike what happened to Pope Leo, who to those that sought from him holy reliques, he cutting part of a napkin, which is called the Corporal, gave it them; but when he perceived a certain man to despise it, Leo in his presence pricked the corporal, whereby he made it plainly appear, that blood flowed from it. Palgofas, lib. 1. cap. 6.

Gregorius Turonensis, cap. 81. de gloria confessorum, writes concerning Marianus the Hermite, a Holy-day in remembrance of whom was wont yearly to be kept, that the house of a certain man (who to perform domestick business, and his necessary occupations, neglecting the observance thereof, and being rebuked for it by a neighbour; answered, That it was better to perform his necessary work, then shew such devotion to such a Saint, whose salvation was doubted) was set on fire and destroyed with revengefull flames, in such manner that his neighbours houses lying close to his, received no hurt at all thereby.

118.

A Certain Aurelianensis, about to labour in his vineyard in the holy Feast of Ascent, the Cartonenfis Abbot, admonished by others to forbear work, as soon as he betook himself to labour, his face was writhed towards his back; (to wit, by the Devil, the murderer of mankind, turned the contrary way,) It was a terrible sight therefore to a multitude of Spectators: but the man going into the Temple of Asitis, and desiring forgiveness of his sin, obtained that pardon, inasmuch that his face was turned to its right place. Gregor. Turonensis lib. de gloria Confess. cap. 99.

119.

A Certain Citizen of Paris having pawn'd his cloaths to a Jew, being not able to redeem them, promised to the Jew, if he would restore his apparrell, to give him for the same, the host which he should receive the next Easter; which the Jew consenting to, he according to his promise bringing to him; the Jew takes the host which he received, and casts it into a vessel full of boiling oyl and water, and with blasphemous words falls to scorn and reproach it; whereupon, as 'tis reported, a most beaurifull young man leapt out, and with wonderfull agility avoided the Jew, who sought to drown him with a staff that had an Iron hook at the end thereof; his sons standing by, and frighted with the strangeness of the sight, run to their Mother, and tell her the cruelty of their father against the young man; immediately there is a great concourse of people, who take the host from the Jew which the Bishop carryed to the Church of St. John in Gravia, the Wife and Children of the Jew were by this miracle converted to the Christian faith, and he brought to prison, where with many words he bragg'd of the virtue of the Talmud, and calls for it to be brought to him to deride thereby the superstition of the rites; which when he had received, and began to hope that he was secure from suffering for his impiety, he with his book were consumed by flames, which issued from from a pile of wood made for that purpose, as violently and swiftly, as an arrow out of a bowe. Thomas Patraarcha Barbariensis, lib. 3. Fortalicis fides.

120.

121.

IN the Armenian Church, a certain impious fellow swore untruly; whereupon his tongue was suddenly tyed; for that he could not speak, but lowed like a beast. And grieving heartily with sighs for the perjury he had perpetrated, he humbly cast himself down at the Sepulchre of the Bishop Dremonius, imploring his help, (not God's, as 'tis commanded) and finds his tongue loosed, and himself able to speak as expeditely as formerly, publicly confessing his sin, for which wittingly and willingly committed, this punishment fell upon him. Gregorius Turonensis de confessoribus, cap. 29.

122.

Melcho, Prince of the Polonians, by stratagem taking Cracovia from Boleslaus Duke of Bohemia, the Princes making a Truce, met together at Cracovia, where Boleslaus is taken at a Feast, and both his eyes put out, and his Nobles cruelly slain; the Prussians being privy to the treachery, and partakers of the wickedness, the same also endeavour treacherously to kill the brother of Boleslaus; for Cochares drawing the young man into a Wood, upon pretence of hunting, commanded him to be bound to the stock of a Tree, and shot at with arrows. It is reported, that at that time St. John Baptist invoked by him, received the arrows upon an hairy covert or skin, and so defended him, and that he warned his Wife by Vision, to relieve her Husband in that great danger; whereupon Ouera, a servant to the Prince, with great haste, and good speed, declared the Treason to the people, who speedily coming to the relief of the Duke, released him, and killed the Traytors. In that place the Monastery of the order of Saint Benedic was built, and a greater Altar placed where the Tree, to which Jannes was bound, stood. Eneas Sylvius, in histor. Bohem.

123.

Constantinus the Emperour being sick, and seeming ready to faint, was restored by the Image of our Saviour; for an holy imbroydered vail placed upon the Chalice, which had the picture of our Saviour wrought upon it, was spread upon the bed wherein he lay, and his body wrapped in it; whereupon the vehemency of his sickness was immediately remitted; and he arising, took meat, was perfectly well, and freed from his disease: but when this recovery of his in this manner seemed to the people as a thing not to be believed, that he might take away the incredulity of them, he went on horseback into the Market-place. Cuspinianus.

124.

IN the time that Ptolomey sought for the cross with great anxiety, because he could no where find it, other Monuments of the Passion of our Lord, miraculously discovered themselves to mortals; At Isuetia, Ludovicus, the son of Philip Augustus for three years, (the King King being absent upon his holy expedition) was visited with such violent sicknesse, that every one expected the expiration of his life, which was onely known to be in him, by weak and almost insensible breathings. Mauritius, the Bishop of Paris, brought with great reverence to Lueta, a part of the blessed crown of Thorns which was kept at the Church of Diouysius, and the sacred nayl, obtained by prayers; which as soon as 'twas but moved towards the sick Prince, his sicknesse was driven away, and his health perfectly restored. Emilius, lib. 6.

A Certain man mortally wounded, by tasting a little bread consecrated by St. Bernard, was immediately healed, he could by benediction make bread continue many years uncorrupt, retaining its colour to the sight, and sweetnesse for the taste. In the Tolosanum Province, many sick, by tasting the bread which St. Bernard had blessed, recovered their health. A certain Salernitanian Citizen, with the water wherein St. Bernard the Abbot had washed his hands, was restored to health. Antorvita.

125.

THe Malmendrenian Monks, after they had in vain by prayers and tears sought the free restitution of their Monastery from Caesar, who had subjected it to the Colonie of Antistitus, they sought for the bones of St. Remachus, and brought them to Leodium, and layd them upon the King's Table, sitting then at meat, which broken with the weight thereof, they by falling, broke the legs and feet of a certain Noble-man, who by the intercession of Remachus, imploring the help of Almighty God, was made whole, and that in such sort, that there remained not so much as the least scarr or mark where his hurts had been; And when as more Miracles were wrought by these reliques, the King did not onely restore what he had taken from the Monastery, but bestowed gifts upon the Monks; Anno 171. Schaffnaburgensis.

126.

IN the Confines of Biturgum and Turohum, Claudiomagus being 7. Governour, there being a famous Church, in a secret place whereof, when in his pilgrimage Saint Martin coming thither, lodged upon straw, upon whose departure the Priests and Virgins in devotion, for that they had a most reverent esteem of his piety, divided amongst them the straw whereon he lay; part whereof, when they hanged about the neck of one possessed with a Devil, he was suddenly dispossessed. Bozsinus, l. 5. Dec. 1.

Chranicon Martini manuscriptum, reporteth, That a certain Noble woman ignorantly translating the bones or reliques of Stephen from Jerusalem, to Constantinople, thinking they had been the bones of her Mother, it happened, That the Devil's howling in the ayr discovered the Angels harmoniously singing, driving them away, and the daughter of the Emperour possessed with a Devil, cried out, If Stephen come, I shall be presently made well.

128.

A

129.

A Certain Noble man, a Prefect or provost under Otho the second Emperour, being possessed with a Devil, by a chain, which as it was believed, had bound St. Peter put about his neck, was presently dispossessed in the year, 983. U Chronicon Saxonie habet. Vincentius, lib. 24. cap. 88. Othonis primi temporibus accidisse narrat, Sigebertus vero secundi.

130.

THE people strewing herbs about the Tomb of Nicetius the Lugdunensian Bishop, Angulphus the Deacon coming from Rome, and bringing with him some of them which were given him by a Priest, gave of them in a draught of cold water to severall visited with Feavers, and they were suddenly restored to health; Gregory of Turon affirms as a most certain truth, that this was done in his time. It is reported, that the Albanensian Bishop, sick of a Feaver, taking bread and water out of a dish (out of which St. Bernard was wont to eat meat), as soon as he tasted thereof, recovered his health. Autor Vita Bernardi. Gregorium Turonensis de gloria confessorum, cap. 85. de Sylvestri Calvillonensis Episcopi lectula funibus ligatur, ligato mira quedam narrat. Many sick of Feavers being laid upon this bed of the Bishop, have been refreshed, made whole, and lusty; he saith he saw many troubled with infirmities, who but by touching some small particles which had been cut from the ropes of the bed, restored to their former health; he likewise saith, he saw his Mother with a particle of a rope which had been cut from the ropes of that bed, to cure a woman sick of a Feaver, by putting it about her neck.

131.

Idem, in Chronico, & Paulus Diaconus, libro 6. cap. 2. de gestis Longobardorum narrat. That in the time of Constantine, about the year of our Lord, 682, during the three moneths of July, August, and September, a pestilence had so depopulated Ticinum, and so many of the Inhabitants which remained alive, fled out of the City, that grass and weeds sprung up in the streets thereof; whereupon it was revealed to certain men, that the Plague would not thence depart, till they had built up the Altar of the Martyr Sebastian in the Church of Saint Peter; And that it came accordingly to passe, for the reliques of Sebastian being translated from Rome to Ticinum, and the Altar built, the Pestilence ceased. And hence it is, that the superstition which possess the minds of the ruder sort of men, by conceiving Sebastian a guardian and defender of men from the Plague, first took its rise.

Constantine the Great having overcome Maxentius, there appeared as a symbol, the sign of the Cross in the firmament; when he likewise thought to fall upon Maximinus, a deadly enemy to the Christians, he was suddenly afflicted with a disease called the Elephantiasie, all his Physicians despairing of his recovery: at last the Greeks having a place in their Capitol, in which they affirm, firm, If the Emperour wash it, being filled with the blood of children, he should recover his former health. Without all doubt, that kind of remedy was familiar with the Kings of Egypt; (Scribit Plinius, lib. 26. cap. 1.) the Children therefore are called together, and the hangman ready, expecting an Edict to perpetrate that villany; but the Emperour, being a most humane gallant man, was so moved with tears of the tender Mothers, that he could by no means find in his heart to deprive them of their children, but delivered them to their Mothers, choosing rather to dye, then to believe himself by the innocent blood of children. The next night he saw by Vision Peter and Paul coming to him, who admonished him to go to Sylvester the chief Bishop of Rome, and wash himself in a pool there which they decyphered to him; he obeys this Vision, and bestowing himself in fasting seven dayes, he with his son Crispus were washed with baptism by holy Sylvester, having been anointed with oyl; at which time an extraordinary miraculous light illustrated the place, and a melodious sound was heard; and Constantine himself being touched by a Divine hand, cometh out of the Laver safe and sound from his infirmity. Nicephorus, lib. 7. cap. 33. et Cedrenus.

L Otharingus being a prisoner at Constantinople, was so robustious and strong, that the Turks were afraid lest he should break his chain and fetters; and therefore they made an Iron Collar or chain, and put it about his neck, with chains of Iron fastned to it five fingers broad, and three fingers thick; reaching to his fetters; in which condition the prisoner remembering St. Nicolas, who had lived in his Countrey, invocates him to intercede to Almighty God for him; whereupon sleeping that night after, the next morning when the Sexton opens early in the morning the door of the Temple of St. Nicolas at Parangulles, he finds there this Captive sleeping, who awakened, acknowledged himself miraculously brought thither in his sleep, it being two thousand miles distant from Nanceum, where the day before he had invocated this Saint's intercession. The miracle being divulged, the people run to see it; and after Mass, having sung some praises to Almighty God, four Smiths are sent for to free him from his chains; which when it appeared that they could by no humane power be dissolved of their own accord, as it were, but by the command of Almighty God, leapt in sunder. Vierus, lib. 2. cap. 29. de praestigiis Dæmonum; ex libello de Gallie Sanctuariis.

133.

G Regorius Turonensis, lib. 5. cap. 6. writeth, That Biuricus, Archdeacon of Lions, by the cutting of Cataracts or skins which grew upon his eyes, lost his sight; and being helpless by Physicians, made his address himself, by the devotion of fasting and prayers for two or three moneths to the Church of Martin, that he might receive his sight; and ardently making his prayers upon the Feast-day of St. Martin, obtained his desire.

134.

135. POpe Leo in the time of Charls the Great, when he had led the Procession through the City of Rome to the Church of Sylveſter, by his chief Officer, for the celebrating the Paſchal; and Pambulus a Priest, whose filthy life he had often corrected, was strip of his Pontifical Robes, and deprived of sight and speech, and coming to the Monastery of Erasmus, and carried to the Image of Albinus, in the Church of St. Peter, as it is reported, he there received again his eyes and tongue. Sigebertus, Anno 799. et Bonfinius, lib. 9. Decad. 1.
136. Gregorius Turonensis, libro de gloria confessorum, cap. 96, tells a miraculous story of one visited with the Palsie, who being drawn in a Coach to celebrate the Feast of Alban, the Andigavenſian Bishop, in his sleep at night he saw a man coming to him, and saying: Rise the third hour, and go into the Temple, for it will come to passe, that at that time Martin and Alban will be there; and if thou likewise be there at that instant, thou shalt recover thy health. Which Miracle, according to the prediction had in his dream, was wrought in the sight of many spectators. Turonensis affirmat.
137. A Certain Priest sick of the Palsie brought to the Tomb of St. Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury, was presently restored to health. At the same Sepulchre a certain man possessed with a Devil, vomits him up with much blood. Vincentius, lib. 24. cap. 95. At Grandauns in the year, 1610, before the body of St. Bavones, which then by chance was brought thither, Mansuindus, a Maid of Antwerp, was cured of the Palsie. Jacobus Meyer, in Chronico Flandr. 1.
138. Cosroes King of Persia hearing that Sergius the Martyr granted all things that were desired of him, sought of him ayd for the defence of his Kingdom, and fecundity to his Wife, being barren, which obtaining of him, he sent to Gregorie a golden Cross, dish, cup, censer, and other gits in honour of Sergius the blessed Martyr. Evagrius, l. 6. cap. 21.
139. Constantine Bishop of Cyprus, tells in the fourth Nicene Act, of a certain man, who by driving a nayl into a wall, struck it into the forehead of St. Peter's picture, and found that he was presently troubled with an Head-ache; whereupon, commanded to pull out the nayl, he obeying, was presently made whole.
140. Frenchmen being sent by Pippin to Floriacum, to carry the bones of Benedict to the Cassianensian Monastery, as they were going into the Temple, by the vertue of Benedict were struck blind; whereupon they returned back, conceiving that he rebuked them, because he would not have France deprived of such holy reliques. Scribit Sigebertus Anno Dom. 753. Vincentius, lib. 13. cap. 155.

141.

A Certain man named Garganus, a Citizen of Pontinum, who fed a great herd of Cattle in the Mountain Prium, lying in Apulia, which is now called Garganus, or the Mount of St. Michael, in the time when the Goths infested Italy by war, seeking a Bull which was strayed from the herd, at last finds him in a cave which was in a hard rock naturally without man's labour; and angry at his straying beast, he shoots at him, the arrow lighting upon the back of the Bull, rebounded back upon Garganus, which he construed to have some divine signification; wherefore he declared what happened, to Lawrence a Priest, who proclaiming a Fast for three dayes, in the night when he was asleep, he had a Vision or Dream, wherein Michael the Arch-Angel appeared to him, affirming to him, that it was his doing that the arrow retorted from the Bull, that he would have that place known to be the oratory wherein he would have a Church for his service; and when the Neapolitans had besieged the City of Sipontinum, (Lawrence declaring the Oracle of the Arch-Angel) the hour they had appointed to break in, the Vision was believed, and the cave of the Arch-Angel, which seemed as if it had been made by handy-work, began religiously to be worshipped; and the dedication of Gelasius the chief Bishop which he prepared, was disapproved by the Arch-Angel, for that a place divinely consecrated, wanted no dedication. Therefore the cave being consecrated with a most royall Temple, most men were wont to come thither once every year, there were tables wherein were written the form of religion, and prayers hanged upon the walls all about, shewing their titles. And where the Altar that belonged to the Statue of the Arch-Angel was, in a place inaccessible by men, there the Statue was placed, which beholding, the mind of man struck with a silent fear, by the contemplation of so great and holy meditations, powreth forth its prayers. Other Altars also made by neither cost nor artifice of man, which seem natural, increase devotion, Pont. l. 2. belli Neapol.

142.

AN old Fisherman told to the Duke Bartholomæus Grandonicius, when the waters rose above their ordinary custome, and thereby threatened much hurt to the Venetians, that early in the morning whilst the storm raged, three men of a venerable aspect came to him, whom he carrying through the passage to the Haven, the storm ceasing, they all remained in the City, one of them in the Church of St. George; another in the Temple of St. Nicolas; the third, having declared the other two, to be George and Nicolas, manifests himself to be Mark the Evangelist, and commanded that he should relate it, because he should receive great benefit from the Prince of the City for his labour in ferrying them over; and that he might have credit from them he should acquaint with the same, he bestowed a Ring on him, to shew to them; whereupon the Venetians bestowing a yearly stipend on the Fisherman, decreed supplications and praises. Fulgosius, lib. 3. cap. 6. et Egnatius eodem.

143.

THe fourty fifth year after the death of Stephen King of Hungary, he being canonized, all the Princes of Hungary, with the King Ladislaus, met together; and after celebrating certain ceremonies in remembrance of the dead, at their coming to the Monument of the holy King, there issued from thence such fragrant smells, that the whole Church was, as it were, filled with a certain heavenly dew: finding his bones moistned, and anointed with a certain kind of Balsom, laid in a Synodon, they began to look for a gold Ring, which was his old Scepter, amongst the liquid balsom; which when they could by no means find in the Marble Tomb, they endeavoured to draw out the moisture, which falling upon, and filling Viols and great Vessels therewith, they were nothing nearer their desire of emptying the Sepulchre thereof; for as fast as they drew it out, it was still by a Divine power supplied; which perceived, they by degrees powred what they had drawn out upon the bones again; and it appeared, that after their infusion thereof, there was neither more nor less in the Tomb; upon finding of which treasure there, an Altar was renewed to the blessed Virgin; and after a short time, the Wife of the illustrious Prince called Matilda, who for three years space had laboured of an intestine disease, invited by the same hereof, vows a pilgrimage to this Chappel in Hungary, whither as soon as she had made her address, she was immediately freed from her torments. Bonsinius, lib. 1. Decad. 2.

144.

After the Pope received testimony of the many Miracles which were done before the Sepulchre of Ladislaus King of Hungary, which shewed the power of Almighty God for his sake to be manifested, in that place he canonized him a Saint. In the same hour that a child, who being an unformed lump of flesh, without hands or feet, and whose bones and sinews were not obvious to the sight of men, was brought to his Sepulchre; as soon as the Parents began their prayers, he received hands, feet, and shape, to their great comfort and rejoycing. Bonsinius, lib. 4. Decad. 3.

145.

THe Sergiopolitans or Antiochians treating with Cosroes King of Persia, to spare their City, offer him sacred treasures for the redemption thereof, offered him a golden Cross, which Iustinian the Emperour, and Theodora, had sent thither; which Cosroes receiving, required more, and amongst others, seeking to take the silver Urn, in which the reliques of Sergius the Martyr were laid, presently an Army all about the streets appeared, which chased away the Persians off the City; so the City was miraculously delivered with the help of Souldiers. Evagrius, lib. 4. cap. 28.

IN the tenth year of Leo Emperour of Isaurus, the Sarazens besieged the Town of Nicea in Bithynia: the City long opposed by storm, and some part of her Walls battered with Engines to the ground, by the appearance of Saints which are there worshipped, the Saracens affrighted with the sight of the Father, left what so hotly they had attempted, and basely fled. Cedrenus. 146.

THE Thessalonians besieged by Michael King of the Bulgarians, upon a certain day went to the Sepulchre, praying all night, and using an ointment which boyled up out of the Sepulchre, uniting their strength together, they all fiercely throwing open the Gates, sally out upon the Bulgarians; whereat the enemy was so amazed, that fear took upon a suddain so deep impression in them, that they all betook themselves to their heels, not so much as one of them standing, or daring to defend themselves; the Leader of the Roman Army was a Martyr, who cleared the way before him; which the Bulgarians who were taken prisoners confirmed by oath, telling, that they saw a gallant young Knight on horseback, who led the Roman Squadrons, from whom flashes of fire came, which lighting upon their enemies, burnt and consumed them. Cedrenus. 147.

THE Cartonenian Citizens hanged up the linnen garment of the Virgin Mary, which Charls the bald had brought from Constantinople, upon the wall, instead of a flag or ensign, which struck blind Rollo the Dane with his Army, and compelled them to depart, without doing injury to the City. Ranulphus, lib. 6. cap. 2. Ganguin, lib. 5. 148.

WHEN Godfrey of Boleign with others had undertaken the Syriac Expedition, setting upon the City Jerusalem by storm, Aimarus the Aniciensian Bishop was seen by many to go before the Souldiers, and scaling the walls first, gave the sign to others to follow him, although it was known for certain, that he departed many moneths before from Antioch, as William the Bishop of Tyre writeth. Fulgosius, lib. 1. cap. 6. 149.

HENRY the second, Emperour, subjugating Boleslaus, who possessing Bohemia, and all the Sclavonian Countrey, and likewise debilitating Poland, taking the sword of Saint Adrianus the Martyr, which had been long kept in a place called Waldberg, divine power working with it, he was most formidable to his enemies, most prosperously prevailing over them, the Martyrs, St. George, St. Lawrence, and St. Adrianus being seen to go before his Armies, and to break the ranks of their enemies. Cuspinianus. 150.

151.

THe Romans carrying before them the holy Lance, with which the side of our blessed Saviour was pierced, instead of an Ensign fighting against Corbana Prince of the Persians, at the Metropolis or chief City of Syria, called Antioch, slew above an hundred thousand of their enemies; they missing when they mustered, of four hundred thousand Souldiers which they had before the fight, two hundred thousand; Baldricus Bishop of the Dolensians, a contemporary, writeth from the mouths of them that were present, That the enemies when they joyned battle, saw three in the shape of most royal Noble-men, sitting upon white horses, and a great Troop of the like countenances, and in like manner apparrelled, who led the forefront against the enemies: these were not seen of all, but some of the Romans, and by them they were believed to be the Martyrs, George, Demetrius, and Mercury; after whose appearance, the Barbarians were so amazed, that void of counsel or courage, and possessed with fear, they most basely ran away. Emilius, lib. 4.

152.

Actius being General, when John King of Bohemia, father to Charls the fourth, Roman Emperour, about the year of our Lord, 1330, invaded Italy, falling sick of the Gowt, underwent great perill in his affairs, circumvented by the unfaithfull dealing of his couzen german, General Leodrisius, who leading the Rhetian and Helvetian cohorts, and with a strong hand gathering together all banished men, came to Asium. Asius, though troubled with the Gowt, raised Souldiers in every place, and left his Garrisons well fortified to the care of Governours, till such time as his expected recruits should come to him. And committing the Van-guard of his Army to his Lievtenant Nervianus, the Leodrisians had prevailed against them, had not St. Ambrose, the Mediolanensian guardian Saint, been seen by many of the City in form of an Horseman, succouting them apparently in their distress; for there came at that time to their relief, Hebor Panicus, with a wing of Catapraetans, Albrogians sent by Ludovirus Subaudius, father-in-law to Asium, which overcame the Rhetians, unseasonably exulting and resting themselves disorderly, putting them to the sword, and took Leodrisius himself prisoner; there being slain at that time above four hundred thousand men. And in the field where this Victory was obtained, a Temple was built to St. Ambrose in memory thereof, where yearly upon the twenty fourth of February, the Mediolanensian people coming together in great pomp, with the Praetor and Counsellors, celebrated his Feast with sacred solemnities; Jovinian in Asio. But Fulgosus, lib. 1. cap. 6. writeth, That the Auxiliaries which came to relieve Asium, as soon as they began battle, clearly saw Ambrose with a whip to fall upon the Barbarians which Martinus Staliger led, being hired thereunto by Leodrisius; and in memory of this Victory, Ambrose was pictured with a whip in his hand, ever after this.

IN the battle wherein Ramirus King of Spain fought against the Saracens before Calagurium, James the Apostle was seen by all who were there, leading the Christian Army, and putting the Saracens to flight. 153.

Nicephorus, lib. 8. cap. 23. reporteth, That Chrysanthus and Musonius being Bishops, who sate in the Nicene Council, and dying before they had subscribed those Articles of Faith which were there agreed upon; the Fathers of the Council therefore went to their Monuments, and holding a writing in their hands, which contained in it the Articles, they spoke to them as if they had been living men hearing them; Holy Fathers, you have fought a good fight with us, you have finished your course and kept the faith, if therefore what we have done ought to be allowed and confirmed, it is meet and needfull, that you (who are illustrated by the splendour of the Trinity, whose beatificall Vision frees you from all obscurity and hindrance, which lets us from the clear and perfect discerning of things,) with us subscribe this little book; who when they had spoke these words, laid it down before the Tomb sealed, and going to their rest that night, and returning in the morning, they found the book sealed with the seals inviolated, and their subscriptions inserted with the rest, which they perceived to be newly written, in these words; We Chrysanthus and Musonius, with all the Fathers in the first holy Oecumenical and Nicene Council do agree, and although translated from our bodies, yet with our own proper hands we have subscribed the Articles in this book. 154.

Pergilis, a Priest, prayed, That he might see what species laid hid under the form of bread and wine, and whilst he continued his supplications for the same, an Angel from Heaven appearing to him, speaketh, saying, Arise quickly, if thou desire to see Christ, he is present, cloathed with that body which the holy Mother of God bore, he therefore casting his eyes upon the Altar, seeth the child, the onely begotten Son of the Father, whom with trembling arms he takes and kisses, and presently restores again to the top of the Altar, and falling prostrate upon his knees again, he implored Almighty God again, that he would turn him again into his pristine species, and as soon as he had finished his prayer, he found the body of Christ returned to his wonted form, as by prayer he had desired. Rabbanus de Sacramento Eucharistiae, cap. 30. Paschasius in libro, de corpore et sanguine Domini, cap. 41. 155.

A Certain Souldier in the City of Rome extinct by the Plague, when he revived, said, That he saw a narrow bridge, under which ran a River ugly and caliginous, which sent forth an incredible stinking savour; but on the other side of the bridge upon the bank-side of the River, he saw pleasant places, which with the variety of flowers which grew therein, sent forth such fragrant odours 156.

as much delighted the smelling faculty, and habitations all about which were of a certain divine form and splendour; but amongst the rest, one was greater, and excelled in glory, for that it was wholly built with golden bricks; but for whom it was built, he could not understand: but he considered, that he observed, that the just most securely passed that bridge; and that the unjust and reprobate fell into the River: then he saw, as he said, a stranger, a Priest, who inoffensively passed through those streights, having quietly and contentedly suffered the going thorow the turnings therein, for that he had lived piously in this world; but amongst those which he saw fall, whom the whirlpool of the froathy snatching stream rolled about, he saw Peter, chief Bishop of the Ecclesiasticall Family, who four years since coming that way, infolded with Iron chains, and in vain striving to swim through the horrible hollow passage, he therefore had a warrant, as a punishment to him, to punish those that hereafter should be guilty, rather severely than indulgently. Marulus, lib. 6. cap. 14.

157. IN the Castle of the seven holy brethren, Albericus, a certain Noble child when he attained the tenth year of his age, afflicted with sicknesse, was brought even to deaths-door; at which time he lay immoveable without sense, as if he had been quite dead, seven dayes and nights. In which interval brought by the blessed Apostle Peter, and two Angels, he cometh to the infernal gulph, at length he was brought to see the pleasant things of Paradise, and lifted up into the aerie Heaven; he was sufficiently instructed by Peter, of things contained in the Old Testament, of the punishments due to sinners, and the glory of Saints: he saw certain secret things which he was forbid to speak; and so for seventy dayes he being led about the Provinces by him, he was restored to life. Chronicon Cassianense, lib. 4. cap. 68.

158. VIncentius* hath a long Narration extant in his book 27. chap. 99. of Tundalus, whose soul was led by an Angel as well to the infernal place of punishments, as purgatory, where he saw many whom he knew, at his first entrance amongst the blessed: he met with a multitude of men and women enduring the misery of rains and winds, pining away with hunger and thirst, but injoying light, molested with no stink; who as the Angel told me, had not lived very honestly, nor had been charitable to the poor, were after some years to enjoy rest. We came then to the port, which once opened and gone through, there appears a flourishing field full of eternal light, in which many souls of both sexes exulted, destinated to those happineses for the torments they had suffered in this life, from which they were now delivered, though not yet deserving to be joyned to the society and fellowship of the Saints. There is a Fountain of life, of which whosoever drinketh, shall live for ever; going a little further, we saw Concober and Donatus, who were tyrannical Kings in their life-time. But Donatus many years years bound in chains, gave all that he had to the poor. Making a further progress, we came to King Cormartus, under whom Tundalus in his life-time served, who spending his time in a silver Palace, was attended like a King by the souls of the poor and pilgrims, upon whom he, being a King, had bestowed his goods; which beholding, the house is obscured, and all the inhabitants consternated. The King going out weeping, seeing his Ministers with hands lifted up towards Heaven, devoutly praying, and saying, As thou wilt and knowest best, have mercy upon my servant. And beholding, he saw the King in fire up to the navel, and from the navel upward cloathed with hair-cloth; saith the Angel, This punishment he suffereth three hours every day, and for twenty one hours he is at rest; for that he stained the Sacrament of holy Matrimony, and therefore he is purged with fire up to his navel, and weareth an hair-cloth, because he commanded his fellow to be slain at St. Patrick's, and prevaricated his oath; excepting these two, all his sins were forgiven him.

THe Soul of another certain man being led by the Angel Raphael to the Heavens above, and infernal places, saw a man sitting in a chair of fire, into whose face most handsome curtezans threw fires which they retracted with their posteriors; and those torments he continually endured, because in his life-time he was given over to lust and luxury. He saw a man whose skin the Devils excoriated or pulled off, and throwing salt upon him, cast him upon a grid-iron, who had been cruel to those who were subject to him: Another riding upon a fierce horse, offered a shee goat which he carried before him, having a Monasticall vesture behind, who had lived by rapine, and had taken a Goat from a poor woman: at length the Monk would have put on feigned repentance. He saw religious men of divers orders, some of which had spent their time in mirth and laughter; others who wallowed in gluttony and lust, whom the Devil tormented with punishment answerable to the wickednesse they had perpetrated. Lastly, he saw Judas the Traytor, who, envied of all the Devils and damned spirits, was held in the bottom of the gulph, where he was exposed to the scorns and railings of them all. This man restored to life, beginning to tell these things to his brethren, contrary to what was given him in charge, immediately was struck upon his face with a staff by Saint Benedict. And (saith he) because thou hast offended by speaking, thou shalt be deprived of thy speech for nine dayes. And having injoynd this penance, he departed. The nine dayes being expired, he at last, as he was commanded, tells the whole story to his Abbot; And the Abbot having received no order to conceal it, publisheth it to the people. Vincentius, libro 29. cap. 8, 9, 10.

159.

160. Genoveffa, a Virgin of Paris, laboured so much of an extasie, that she was for three dayes breathless; only her cheeks were observed to have some rednesse in them: who coming to her self, affirmed, That she had been led to Hell, went to the fields of the blessed, and that she had manifestly seen the punishments of the wicked. Bonifacius, lib. 5. Decad. 1.
161. Erasmus, Bishop and Martyr, after intolerable tortures suffered by him for the testimony of Jesus Christ and his Gospel, the Apostles and Prophets were seen to bring him a Crown; delighted with which Vision, he prayed Almighty God to put an end to his life; which he obtained; most gently breathing out his soul. Martinus, lib. 6. cap. 16.
162. Ursinus, a Priest Nursin, as he was about to yield up his soul joyfully cryed out, giving thanks to them whom he only saw coming to him; they that stood by, inquiring who they were, at whose coming he so greatly rejoyced, with he, Do not you see the Apostles Peter and Paul here present, calling me away? Presently whilst turning towards them whom he alone saw, and repeating, I come, I come, behold I come, he departed; leaving his body void of a soul. Gregorius, lib. 4. Dialogorum, cap. 11.
163. A Certain man who led a religious life, knowing Ezekiel and Daniel the Prophets who appeared to him, saluted them; and whilst he shewed them reverence, whom none else discerned, though many were present, performing his duty, he departed. Idem.
164. Metulus, a Gregorian Monk at Rome, a man adorned with notable sanctity of life, in his sleep dreamed, That he saw a crown made of most white flowers which fell from Heaven, and was to be put upon his head; afterwards visited with sickness, with great alacrity finished his course. Then by the command of Peter the Abbot, the fourteenth year after his death, his Sepulchre being opened, a most incredible sweet smell ascended out of it; for which cause it was thought, that the Vision he had was true. Idem. lib. 4. cap. 47.
165. Gregorie tells us of a Maid of Christ named Gulla, living at Rome; To whom the Apostle Peter appeared, inviting her to go along with him, for that her sins were forgiven. This Vision, when she her self had related to others, to the end to go along with him, to whom the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven were given; she put off her body with as much readines and willingness, as a man undresth himself to take his rest. Idem. lib. 4. cap. 11.

DE Musa puella, idem Gregorius, cap. 17. tradit, That in a Vision by night there appeared to her the Mother of God, with a company of Virgins, injoyning her to abstain from laughter, jests, and all vanity; for that it would come to passe, that after thirty dayes, he should exult and rejoyce in the company of her, and her Virgin. Whereupon being visited with sickness, and at last the time approaching of which she was foretold, comforted with the same Vision again, as if she had answered to one, calling upon her, she said, I come, Lady, I come. And with those words she breathed out her soul.

166.

IT is remembred, That Probus Reatinus the Bishop, who by his languishing condition, knew that he was shortly to depart this life; all that were wont to be with him, by chance being gone from him, except one boy, saw Juvenal and Eleutherius the Martyrs, entering the Room; at whose approach being terrified, and stupified with the suddain lustre and shining, understanding where they were broke suddenly out of the bed, with the noise whereof the family raised, run to the place where the Bishop lay, but found nothing but his dead body, his soul being departed. Marul. lib. 6. cap. 16.

167.

THe body of St. Jerome when he had given up his soul, was surrounded with a suddain glorious light, Angels appeared, and the voyce of Christ was heard, which invited him to his Heavenly Kingdom. The same hour Cyril, Bishop of Jerusalem, saw his soul carried by Angels going towards Heaven; the same day his holy soul shining with wonderfull brightness, appeared to Augustine, Bishop of Hippo. At Turon two Monks saw a shining Globe passing through the Skies, and thereupon immediately heard a Quire of Angels most ravishingly singing, which whilest they admired, they understood that the soul of Jerome the Priest who dyed then at Bethlehem, was carried by Angels to rest in Paradise, Sec. Idem.

168.

THe day that St. Augustine was buried, a certain Monk who abode far off, being wrapt in spirit, saw him singularly arrayed with a Miter, and Bishops weeds, sitting amongst the clouds all in glorious whiteness, such radiant beams proceeding from his eyes, as illuminated the whole Church, incredible sweetnesse of odour delighting his smelling faculty. Afterwards he was seen by Bernard, whilest Sermons were read in the night-time by his brethren in the Church, casting out of his mouth most pure waters, which immeasurably flowed upon the Pavement of the Church. Idem.

169.

170.

AS the life, so the death of Francis Asietus (from whom the Order of Minors begun) was noble and magnificent, who expiring, a certain brother saw his soul in form of a star, to flue out of his body, and fly towards Heaven: The same hour an Husbandman grievously sick with over-labouring, his soul being eady to depart, languishing and speechlesse, on a suddain broke forth into speech, saying, Expect me, father, expect me; and, being asked, he said, he saw St. Francis with great light making toward Heaven. Which said, his soul went out of his body, making god his words by his action continually, following him whom he had said he saw. Marulus, lib. 6. cap. 16.

171.

ACertain Monk of Adonew at Rhotemagium, in the night going to see one with whom he was enamour'd, fell off the bridge into the water, and was drown'd. The Devils contend with an Angel for his soul; it is agreed betwixt them, to refer it to Richard Duke of Normandy, to end the difference. His order was, that his soul restored to his body, should first be placed upon the bridge, and if he took the way which leadeth to his beloved Mistress, he should be in the power of the Devil; but if he should take toward his Church, his soul should be in the power of the Angel: which done, the Monk returned to his Monastery, and so it is believed he was freed from the jaws of the Devill. Ravulphus, lib. 6. ca. 7. in Polychronico.

172.

VVhen before the body of a certain dead Monk, Mass was celebrated, at the singing of Agnus Dei, he leaped off the Beer, blaspheming God, refusing to kiss a wooden cross which was offered him to kiss, falling upon the Virgin Mary with railing words, deriding those that sung Psalms, for that he was ordained to the horrid torments of Hell. The Monks beating their breasts with their fists, pour forth prayers devoutly for him; the poor man receiving a better mind, began to laud and praise the omnipotency of Christ, to renounce Satan, to adore the cross, and to confess, That after he took the life of a Monk upon him, and vowed chastity, he perpetrated fornication; and praising God, the next day he comfortably departed. Vincenius, lib. 25. cap. 62.

173.

ACertain Monk of France saw the soul of a most lewd and wicked man, who notwithstanding he put on Monasticall weeds in the agony of death was bound by the Devil in fiery chains, and that he saw him dragged towards Hell: but at last by the intervention of St. Benedict, was freed; for that whilst he was adorn'd with his habit he had done no hurt. Also Maurin, a Cassinenian Monk, who being precipitately cast down from an high Window in the night by the Devil, broke his neck, he complained to a great favourer of his in the Monastery; (for that was with many prayers sought by that convent) that in his sleep this evil was imposed on him by the Devil; but that he was freed by the help of St. Benedict; from hence alms-giving, and the number of Psalms said for the dead in that Monastery increased. Cassianus, lib. 4. cap. 4.

by

When St. German came to Turnodunum, he cometh to the Sepulchre of a certain disciple which had followed him out of Britain, and asked him, whether he would warr with him any further? who answered, That he had sufficiently warr'd, and that he enjoyed heaped rewards for his fight; and further prayed, that he would depart. Saith Germanus, Rest in peace and happinesse; so he laying down his head, slept in the Lord. When he made his journey to Augustodunum, at the Tomb of Cassianus the Bishop born in Scythia, having much company, in the hearing of them all, he called to him in the Tomb, and enquired what and how he did? saith he, I enjoy sweet rest, and expect the coming of my Redeemer. To whom Germanus answered, Rest happily therefore, and intercede more diligently for our health. Bonifacius, lib. 4. Decad. 1.

174.

Paschasius, a Deacon of the Apostolicall Court, excelling by his piety towards God and man, (as it is reported by Gregory;) but that he pertinaciously stood for Laurence, (whom he thought more worthy) against Symmachus, who was judged by the voyces of all men worthy of the place of chief Bishop, when after death he was to pay punishment for his fault, he was found by Germanus Bishop of Capua, performing the drudgery of a servant in the Angulaniar Baths; which Germanus when he understood the cause, went away, and for some dayes made supplication for him, returning, knew that he was freed from that burthen, and that his prayers were heard; whom now he perceived was not to be found there. Marul, lib. 4. cap. 11.

175.

A Certain Priest having come often to wash himself at the baths called Centurelle, offered bread as a reward to one that had often freely waited upon him, and found, that he did not want it; for he had been Lord of that place, and after death he was there punished again, to expiate a certain offence, by suffering punishment; yet he offered much to him, if by offering consecrated bread he would pray for him; wherefore the Priest offered the holy Host and praying for him, returned to the Baths; but not finding the man, he understood that he was freed from his pain.

176.

Idem.

Benedict

177. Benedict the Tenth, chief Bishop, after his death appearing to John the Portuense Bishop, confesseth, That he was kept, by Odilones his prayer, from eternal death; And that he now appeared to him, that he would go to him, and desire him, that he would pray for him now being in Purgatory, as he was accustomed when he was living. This Message being delivered, the Abbot and he prayed for him, and injoynd all the Monks who were with him, to do in like manner. Not long after, Benedict gloriously shining, appeared to Edelbert the Monk, and told him, that he was translated from Purgatory to Beatitude. Odilones and the Monks praying for him, he appeared again to Odilones, giving him thanks, for that he had received so great mercy, chiefly by his prayers. Idem. Ibidem.

178. Robertus Gaguinus telleth, That John the Anchorite reported to Ansoaldus, Bishop of Pithavum, That he was raised by a certain reverend old man from his sleep, and commanded to pray for the soul of Dagobert King of France, the hour of his death; which when he had done, he saw a company of Devils in the midst of the Sea; who carried the soul of the King in a boat hawling him to torments, he calling upon Martin, Maurice, and Dionysius, the Martyrs, to help him against them, and that those three men came to him clothed in white garments, professing they were the men he called on, who helped Dagobert, and freed the soul of the suppliant King from torments without delay, and carried him with them to heaven. Sigebertus in Chronico, about the year of our Lord, 645. telleth to a certain man, That the soul of Dagobert coming to Judgment, was accused by many Saints for his spoiling of Churches, and that evill Angels endeavouring to take him away, Dionysius the Parisiensian intervened and freed him, onely prescribing that, in satisfaction of the wrong he had done, he should to the honour of God, and the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, whom he had offended, build a Church.

179. Maurence the Rothamagensian Bishop, brought into the Temple after his death, having received his soul again, said to them that stood about him, Mark well the last words of your Pastour, I am naturally dead, but am revived, that I may declare to you what I have seen, for I am to retain my soul no longer then I speak to you, my conductors, whose apparrell and countenance was most fair and lovely to behold, and their speech most pleasant, promised me going towards the Sun-rising, the delectable and wished for enjoyment of Paradise; and having finished the adoration of Saints at Jerusalem, we went towards Jordan, by the Inhabitants whereof our company increasing, I was filled with exceeding joy; and when I made haste to passe the River, my companions reported, that our Lord had taught, that veniall sins which I had not formerly washed away by confession, would be purged by the aspect and fear of the the Devil, which thereupon I should conceive; forthwith there appeared an army of most ugly spirits, flourishing and tossing most sharp Spears, and vomiting out of their mouthes flames of fire, so that the ayr seemed all over filled with Iron and flames; at which sight I was miserably filled with horreur. That therefore you may consult and provide for your safeties, I have assumed this habit to speak to you: and presently again he expired. Vincentius, lib. 25. cap. 4.

M*acarius of Alexandria* upon a time walking in Scythian solitude, looking upon the skull of a dead man lying upon the ground, began to obtest it by the name of Jesus, and to interrogate it of what Countrey he was when he lived, and in what place his soul, somerimes his Inhabitant, now abode? His dry mouth denudated of flesh and nerves burst forth into speech, answering, he had been a Gentile; and an Inhabitant of the next Village; and that now his soul was thrust crowded as remotely deep into the Gulph of infernal perdition, as Heaven is distant from the Earth; but the incredulous Jews were thrown lower then he, and Hereticks, who endeavoured to pervert with falshood the revealed truth of Divinity, lower then they. Idem.

180.

C*yrillus Hierosolymitanus* reporteth, Whilest in great heaviness he was at prayer, desiring that he might know the condition of the soul of Ruffus his dead Nephew; he first smelt a most heavy stink; intolerable, if he had not stopp'd his nose; and presently after he saw Ruffus bound in burning chains, vomiting flames out of his mouth mixt with smoke; his body all over by reason of the heat, he seemed to suffer within, sparkling fire; and being much affrighted with this sad spectacle, he earnestly desired to know for what cause a man, who for his integrity of life was beloved of all men, should be judged worthy of such punishments? No fault was objected against him, (for ought he could find) for which he was so tormented; but his playing at dice, which he sundry times using, thought it a light sin, or none at all; and therefore neglected to confess it to a Priest. Idem.

181.

A Certain man in the confines of the Province Valeria, before the Priest Severus came to him to absolve him of his sinnes, finished his course presently; the same day the Lord looking upon the prayers and tears of Severus, the young man revived; and being asked what became of his soul, whilest his body was deprived of it; he answered, That it was snatched by certain men blacker then Moors, who breathed fire out of their mouthes and nostrils, who carried him through open and rough places; but as he was thus led, being met by young men arrayed in white garments shining with a glorious light, the Devils were forced to dismiss him, and restore him to his body; for that they said, God had granted this

182.

this to Severus, who had by prayer devoutly desired it: Therefore having confessed his sins to the same Priest, and done penance, he dyed the seventh day again, but more happily then before. Martulus, ex Gregorio.

183.

IN the time that Rome was repaired, after the Goths had wasted it, one, rather wicked then ignoble, being dead, revived. As his friends were bewailing his death, and said, Send one to the Church of Lawrence the Martyr, to enquire what Tiburtius the Priest doth; for I saw him put upon a pile of wood fiercely burning: I also saw another pile, which, with the point of the flame thereof, seemed to reach Heaven, I heard a voyce breaking out of the flame, which shewed for whom this punishment is prepared; which having declared, he was stricken, not with a Planet, but death it self, and again returneth from whence he came; and it appeared, Tiburtius at that instant exhaled his wretched soul, whom every man almost fore-judged, every one detesting his life; for though he was a Priest, he had nothing belonging to his place besides the figure and name. Idem.

184.

Stephen, a Roman, illustrious in his age, going to Constantinople, fell sick and dyed; and, because they who accompanied him; had a desire by reason of the respect they owed him, to carry his body to his native Countrey, they enquired for one to imbalm him, by taking out his bowels, and applying Spices and ordinary means to keep the body from putrifying in the Journey: They could find no imbalmer by all their inquisition they made after one, but the next day the dead body was restored to life, and lived long after, though not so reformedly as he ought. Wherefore many rebuked him, because what horrid sights he had seen, did not terrifie him from evill-doing. He was wont to tell that he was then carried to Hell, and saw those formidable things which formerly he had heard, and would not believe; and that while he stood as one guilty before the Tribunal of the Judge, it was commanded that he should be dismissed, and their mistake who had convented him, was reprehended; for that it was commanded, that not he, but Stephen the Smith should be led thither: The same hour the Smith departing this life, caused this to be believed a reall Vision, and not reputed an idle dream. Martulus, lib. 6. cap. 14.

VVilliam, a boy of fifteen years of age, had a Viſion in the Night, wherein there appeared to him a certain glorious man, who led him to a place of torments, and ſeeing men excruiated after various manners, at laſt was brought to the Devill himſelf, who in his fiery Manſion amidſt the flames, ſate as a Judge in his Tribunal: preſently a certain ugly ſpirit leapt up, accuſing the boy; ſaith he, I have ever ſuggeſted evill things to this boy, but of thoſe ſins which he committed lately, he made no mention at all to the Priſt at his confeſſion; he that led the boy perſwaded him to ſign himſelf with the ſign of the Croſs; which done, all his fear of damnation was taken away. Vincentium, lib. 27. cap. 84.

185.

IT is reported, That in the Sabine Province there was a certain Nunne, who ſtrictly obſerved chaſtity, but defiled her tongue with fooliſh procacity; and when ſhe paſt her laſt day, being buried in the Church, the Priſt coming into the Church at midnight, ſaw her diſtended before the Altar, cut through the middle, her higher part burnt with fire, and her lower part left untouched: in the morning therefore telling to his brethren what he ſaw, as he looked upon the place in which he ſaw her burnt; he ſheweth to them the marks which he found in the Marble of the ſcorching fire. Gregorius Magnus, lib. 4. Dialog. cap. 50.

186.

The End of the Second Book.

H b b

The

The Opinions and Arguments of the Sadduces, and Epicures; by which they would prove, that the Angels and Devils do not appear unto Men; Confuted.

MAny there have been at all times, and in all Ages, which have impugned, and stiffly denied the Apparitions of Devills, Angells, and Spirits: But some have done it in one sort, and some in another. For there be some, who (torridde themselves altogether from the question and disputation, that might be made concerning particular and speciall matters, which are often alledged, in regard of the Apparition of Specters) do bend themselves against them all in generall; That so by cutting off the roote, and undermining the foundation of a Principle well grounded, they may the more easily cause the overthrow and downfall of all that which dependeth upon the same.

They deny therefore, that there are any Angells, or Devils at all: or any Spirits, severed and abstracted from a corporall substance or body: to the end that by consequence they may infer and conclude, that there are not likewise any Specters, nor Apparitions of Spirits. Such were the Sadduces, as we may read in the Acts of the Apostles; and the Epicures; and the greatest part of the Peripareticks; and all sorts of Atheists whatsoever. Of which last, there are at this day more huge numbers abounding within this our Realm of France, then would be tolerated. These men would not stick to affirm (if they durst, and were it not for fear of the Magistrate) that it is free for men to abandon themselves to all kind of iniquity, impiety, and dissolute living: for so do they mutmure, and mumble, when they are alone and by themselves; that there is not either God, or any Spirits at all, good, or evil: nor yet any Hell, where the Soules of men should suffer any pains or punishment; but that they dye together with the body; And that all whatsoever is said or alledged, touching Hell-torments, is nothing but a vain and superstitious toy, and fable; onely to make babes and children afraid: and to wrap and tye the greatest persons of the World in certain bonds of a Religious superstition: for so are the words of Lucretius, in this behalf. And I do believe, that they do often say in their hearts, that which Zyphagoras, the Samian, is alleged in Ovid, to have said to the Inhabitants of Crotona in Italy,

Why stand you thus in fear of Styx, and such vain dreamings,
Of Manes, and of Spirits, which are nought else but lessings?

Certainly he that should take upon him, to instruct these Alchiefs, should but lose his time; because they will admit of no reasons, no not of those that are merely naturall. For seeing they do not believe him which hath the command and rule of Nature, how can they yield any credit or belief unto those reasons that are drawn from nature it self?

Other persons there are, who, being more religious, and honest men then those former; yet have no lesse denyed the essence of Angels, Devils, and Spirits: Howbeit they have been of this opinion; that by reason both of the distance between them and us, and of the difficulty of appearing in a humane body; they cannot possibly present themselves unto us.

Others also there have been, who have referred all that which is spoken of the vision of Spirits, unto the naturall and perpetuall depravation of the humane senses. Such were the Scepticks, and the Aporreicks, who were the followers of the Philosopher Pirron: as also the second and third Academy, who held; That the senses, were they never so sound, could not imagine any thing, but falsely and intrusly.

Again, some others, with more appearance of reason then the Scepticks, have affirmed; that abundance of Melancholly, and Choller adust, Frenzy, Feavers, and the debility or corruption of the senses (be it naturall, or by accident) in any body, may make them to imagine many things which are not. And they do infer, that such as happen to be attainted with these maladies, do think that they have seen Devils, and other such like Specters. They add moreover, that the fear, superstition, and credulity of many is such, that they will most commonly suffer themselves to be drawn into a belief and perswasion of that, which is quite contrary to truth.

To make short; Others there be, wise enough and fine conceited; yet neverthelesse (being great mockers, and incredulous; because they themselves did never happen to see any Vision, nor have ever heard or touched any supernaturall thing) they have been of this opinion; that nothing could appear unto men, that exceeded or went beyond the course of nature. And of this number, Lucian was one; who (being also as great an Infidell as any could be) said: I believe no part of all these Apparitions: because I onely amongst you all did never see any of them. And if I had seen of them, assure your selves, I would believe them, as you do. Notwithstanding for all this, he opposed himself against all the famous and renowned Philosophers of his time, and held argument against them, though (as himself confessed) they were the chiefest

and

and most excellent in all kind of knowledge and learning. And he was not ashamed to stand onely upon his own bare conceit and opinion: impudently maintaining, without any reason at all, against them that were as wise, if not more wise then himself, and more in number: that forsooth nothing at all, whatsoever was said or alledged touching Specters, ought to be admitted or believed. But what reasons I pray you doth he bring, to confirm his saying? Truly none at all: but that onely of his own absolute and unconcontrouled authority, he will draw to his incredulity, all others, whom he seeth to be assured and settled in their opinion: Notwithstanding, that they are certainly resolved of the truth, by the exterior senses, with which they have perceived and known that to be true, which so constantly they do maintain and defend. But how can it possibly be, that a man should think, without any shew of reason, by incredulity and mockery onely, to confute and overthrow that, which hath been ever of all men, and in all ages, received and admitted? Certainly, this is the fashion and guise of mockers, and scorers, that that which they cannot deny, nor yet have a will to confesse, they will find the means to put it off with a jest and laughter: and so think secretly to insinuate themselves into the minds and conceits of their hearers; especially, such as look not, nor have a regard to the truth and substance of a thing, but onely to the outward shadow, and grace of words and glorious speeches. Such a scorner needeth not any great knowledge: because it is sufficient for him to be superficially skillfull in any thing; so that he can with a kind of grave and smiling grace, shifft off the reasons and arguments of those, whose knowledge, and learning, is so exceeding far beyond his, as during his whole life, he will never attain unto the like. Thus did Machiavel carry himself: who amongst the learned, and men of skill and judgment, knew well how to make his profit of his scoffes, and pleasant grace in jesting; whereby he would many times strike them out of countenance, in the sight of them that heard him; whereas, if he had come to dispute with them, by lively reasons, and solid Arguments, he would at the very first blow have been overthrowen and confounded. But in the end he discovered himself sufficiently, and was reputed of all men, no other then a Scoffer, and an Atheist, as Paulus Jovius testifieth of him.

But we will cease to speak any further of him, of Lucian, and of those of their humour, and will return to our matter, touching Specters: the which, that we may the better explain (now that we have briefly declared the diversity of opinions, of those that insist upon the contrary) we will answer unto each of them in order, as they have been propounded. And first, as touching the Sadduces, the Epicures, the Peripatericks, we will severally answer their Arguments which they object against us: Next, we will remove those difficulties, which are objected, and shew how the Angels and Devils may take upon them a body. Afterwards, we will shew and discover unto the Scepticks, that the humane senses are not so faulty and uncertain, as they would make men believe. And last of all, (to the intent we may leave nothing behind) we will not forget to shew, by what maladies and infirmities the senses may be hurt and troubled: and the Imaginative power of man wounded and changed: so as all that which is supposed to be seen, is meerly false and untrue.
not

To come first of all to the Sadduces: It is most certain, that of all men they were the most grosse and carnall: and did not believe that any thing was spirituall: but they did imagine all to be corporall: because they said, that the Humane Understanding doth alwaies work with the Phantasme, and with the thing Imagined. And it appeareth, that in dreaming of any thing whatsoever, we do alwaies imagine it to be corporall: whereupon they conclude, that all things are corporall: and therefore that even God also is a corporal Substance, which is the greatest absurdity and Blasphemy that can be imagined in the world. For if we should restrain God into a body, we must also make him subject to a body: (so saith Saint John Damascen) which, in a word, is to restrain and shorten the power and omnipotency of God: the which being infinitely above all substances, both corporall and incorporall, is not subject to their Category. The reason that moved them to believe that God was corporall, was a place of Moses (for they did not receive nor admit of any Scriptures, but the five Books of Moses; as saith Origen) wherein it is written. That God made Moses to lay in the Cave of a Rock or Mountain: and putting his hand upon him, did shew him his hinder parts, not suffering him to see his face. And therefore in regard that Moses attributeth unto God a face, a hand, and other parts, they conclude that God hath a body. Of the same opinion also was Tertullian, (as witnesseth Saint Augustine, writing to Optatus) and the Bogomiles, being certain Heretiques of Bulgary: who thought that God was as we are (so writeth Enthymus): and that from his two eyes, out of his brain did issue two beams; the one called the Sunne, and the other, the Holy Spirit: which is a most blasphemous and intolerable error.

Now the occasion, why the Sadduces did so eagerly defend and maintain, that God had a body; was, because they would deny all incorporall substances: to which effect they thus argued. If God (say they) have created any substances, he created them to his own Image and likenesse: and therefore when he made man he said, That he made him according to his own Image: shewing thereby, that he was of a corporall substance: because that Man, whom he formed to the pattern of his own face, is corporall. And if God have made nothing but what is corporall: It followeth, that the Angells and Devils which are said to be Spirits, are nothing but meer fables: and that there be not any Souls, or spirits separated from a corporall substance: and by consequence, that the Soul of man is mortall, as the body; and hath no need to be reunited thereunto by the generall resurrection.

But it is easy to answer them; by denying plainly, that God is corporall, or hath any body. For albeit, the holy Scripture doth attribute unto God, hands, feet, face, eyes, and other parts of a body: yet this must be understood spiritually; and by those corporall and bodily members, we must imagine the spirituall vertues of God (according as saith S. Gregory): as, by his eyes, we must understand his foresight and his knowledge; to the which all things are open, and from which nothing is hidden and concealed: By his hand, is meant, his Almighty power and puissance: By his face, the plenitude and fullnesse of his glory. By his broader parts, his glory is shadowed, as under the vail of some certain form and similitude. And whereas they say, that the Understanding doth work with the Imagination: and that we do Imagine God to be a corporal substance: This hath no reason, nor any appearance of truth at all; but is an errour, common to them, with the Epicures: to the which we will answer anon. And as touching the Angels: I do greatly marvell how the Saduces can deny the being of them; seeing that Moses in many places doth make mention of them, and of their Apparition. We may therefore very well say of them, that they use the Books of Moses, as men use their Stirrops, in lengthening and shortning them, at their pleasures. This is the reason, why Iustine Martyr did not reckon them in the number of the Jews (and that worthily) but reputed them as Hereticks: not allowing them any place in the Jewish Church, by reason of the fond and absurd opinions which they held, not onely of God, but also of the Angels, Devils, and Souls of men, which they affirmed to be mortall. But as concerning this latter point, we shall speak more hereafter. Let us now consider the Arguments of the Epicures.

The first errour of the Epicures is, that God hath a body; as the Saduces did believe likewise. And their first Argument was, That nature it self (forsooth) did teach and admonish us, to believe, that both God and all Celestiall essences were corporall; for two reasons: The former was, because the Gods are not figured in any other, then in a humane form. And the second, because whether it be in sleeping, or in waking, when we dream or imagine of the Gods, no other form doth present it self unto our Imaginations, but a humane shape: And therefore they conclude, that the Gods are in figure like unto men. But unto this Argument, Cicero answereth sufficiently; That such humane shape, and form, is attributed unto the Gods by the invention of men: and that either it proceedeth from the wisdom of the Antients; who thought thereby they should the more easily draw the spirits and minds of the ignorant, to the knowledge of spirituall, and supernatural things; and that they should the sooner bring and reduce them into the way to live well and vertuously: Or else, that the same had its beginning and first footing from a blind superstition: which doth most easily allure men to adore those gods which are portrayed and carved in a form most pleasing and agreeable unto men; Or else, that it is but a fiction of Poets and Painters; who have alwaies been audacious retain and devise any thing, rather than that which should be according to truth and verity. And this last point may well serve to answer that, which the Epicures say; that, be it in sleeping, or in waking, the gods do not present themselves unto us, in any other then a humane form: For this is certain, that by the portraiture and pictures which we see of the gods, in those forms which are common and familiar unto us; we do imagine (though falsely) that which may resemble unto us, the same which we have seen to be painted. In so much, that Jupiter seemeth unto us, to have a face and countenance terrible, with his hair black, and hanging backward; as Phidias did engrave him. And Minerva had her eyes blew, or of an azure colour; as Homer describeth her. Mercury was painted like a young man, having his eyes alwaies open, as one that was ever waking: with bright yellow hair, and a yellow down upon his chin and cheeks, as if it did but newly begin to frizzle or to curl. Venus had her eyes delicate and wanton, and her locks of Gold yellow. Juno had grosse and thick eyes, rising up towards her head, like unto the eyes of an Oxe. And so generally were the rest of the Gods painted by the Gentiles, in divers forms and fashions. Notwithstanding, all this proceeded of nothing else, but from the error of our Imagination, which suffereth it self to be deceived and seduced, by the painting, which imprinted in it a kind of false notion. I say, a notion: because the ignorant common sort of people, is perswaded of the same, and suffereth it to take place in their mind, or Understanding: which is as easy also to be deceived, as is their Imagination. But a man of Wisdom and Judgment, (who hath his understanding more clear and open) is not easily therewithall seduced: but notwithstanding all paintings and fictions, his Intellect, or understanding power pierceth through the imagination (as the Sun pierceth or shineth through the Clouds): and spreading it self, with her light, doth easily believe in a spirituall manner, that God and the Angels are Spiritual.

The second Argument of the Epicures, touching the humane body of God; was, that God took upon him that form, which was, or could be imagined, to be the most beautifull in the whole World. And they say, that the humane form, or shape, is of all others, the most goodly and excellent: And therefore we ought to think that God is carnall and corporall, as men are. Hereunto needeth no answer to be made: because the consequence of their Argument is not good: viz. That God should retain unto himself the figure of a man, because the same is the most excellent of all other creatures in the World. For the Divinity of God, neither is, nor can be, in any corporal substance: but it is an incorporeall and spirituall essence, which hath nothing common with that substance which is proper unto these Earthly Creatures.

The third and last Argument of these Philosophers, is a Gradation or heaping up of Syllogisms: which kind of Argument, the Greeks Greeks call a Series: and they frame it in this sort; It is held and confessed of all, that God, and all other celestiall powers, are exceedingly happy: But no person can be happy, without vertue: And vertue cannot be present in any, without reason: and reason can be in none, but in the figure and shape of man. Therefore it must be granted, that the Gods, which have the use of reason, have the form of man also. But the whole frame of this Argument may soon and easily be dissolved, by denying, that reason can be in no other, then in a humane shape: For both God and the Angels, who have a divine and spiritual understanding, have the use of reason, notwithstanding, that they be not of a corporall substance. And reason in man, cometh not of the humane body: but from the Soul of man, which is spiritual and Divine, made unto the likenesse of God, and capable of reason, of prudence, and of Wisdom.

Now, whereas it might be objected to the Epicures; That in making their Gods to have a humane body, they do therein make them subject to death and dissipation. To avoid this absurdity, they do tumble into a greater; affirming, that their body is as a body; and their blood, as blood; not having any thing, but the lineaments and proportion of a man, and being exempted from all crassitude and thickenesse: which in a word, is as much as to say, that their gods were rather Idols of men, then very men; and rather framed by the pattern of men, then as men in truth and substance: which is a thing the most ridiculous that can be imagined.

But, will some say, to what purpose serveth all this, touching our matter of Specters? I have said before, that the Sadduces did maintain God to have a body, to the end they might the better deny the appearing of Specters; which are substances without a body. Also the Epicures made their Gods to have bodies; that so they might hold them in the Heavens idle, and doing nothing: and by consequence might deny their Apparition upon Earth. For as touching Devils or Spirits, they believed there were not any: but did confound them all in the number of their Gods. And, that they did but make a jest of Specters, appeareth by the speech of Cassius in Plutarch: and in that that Celsus (half an Epicure) writing against the Christians, did deny them flatly and absolutely, (as is to be seen in Origen, who hath answered him) and did reprove the Christians, in that they would allow of any powers, or Spirits, contrary to the gods: supposing (according to his own saying, and opinion) that there were no Devills. Besides that, he made a mock and a jest of Angels, and of the Resurrection of the body: and generally of all those Apparitions, which were made, both in the Old and New Testament.

And now that we speak of contrary powers, it putteth me in remembrance of a speech of Plutarch, who reproveth Chrysippus, for that in this universall body of the World, so well ordained and framed, he should grant so great an inconvenience, (to wit) that there should be a kind of Devills afflicting and tormenting men, to the disturbance of the concord and harmony of the World:

Which being well ordained by the Author and maker thereof, ought not to be thought to hurt or sustain any thing which should be incommodious to it self; and by lapse, and continuance of time, should work the confusion and destruction of the same. But it seemeth, that Plato reprehended Chrysippus, upon a desire and humour of contradiction, rather then moved upon any just cause, or matter of truth. For the Devils do not work any damage or inconvenience to the World; being bridled and restrained by the hand and power of God. And if they do torment men, or tempt them, it is to exercise them, or to manifest the glory and Justice of God; of the which they are sometimes made the executioners. And as in each Common-Wealth, well instituted, there be executioners ordained, for the punishment of Malefactors, and such as trouble and disturb the publick peace, and good of the Common-Weal, and yet the universal body of the Common-weal is not thereby offended, or endamaged; but to the contrary, rather it receiveth much more profit and commoditie. Even so God hath placed, and left here below in this World, Devils and wicked Spirits, to be as tormenters and executioners to wicked men: that so his Justice might shine the more glorious, to the comfort of the godly, and of his Elect, that live in the love and fear of him.

But to come again unto the Epicures: It is most certain, that they were no other, then the followers of nature; and that onely so far as things did fall under their outward senses. And if one should alledge unto them, that any Specters, Images, and Visions, had presented themselves; they would refer the same, for the most part, to the concurrence and perpetuall flux of their Atomes: or to some other like reasons; the which we hold it not amisse to discover and decipher at large, as we have drawn them out of Cicero, or of Lucretius. All Images (say they) which do externally present themselves unto our senses; either they are visible, or invisible; If they be invisible, either they are created in the Ayre, or in our own minds and conceits. As touching those made in the Ayre; it is not any strange thing, or abhorring from reason, that in the same should be engendred certain voices; like as we see it is naturall, that gold commeth from the Rivers; ebbing and flowing, from the Sea; and hear, from the Sun. And it may be, that some voice, being spread abroad within the Valleys, doth not onely rebound back again, to the place from whence it came; but doth dilate and scatter it self here and there, throughout the Ayre, as do the sparks that mount up from the fire. So that for one voice there are many engendred; which running through the empty Ayre, do enter within the Ears of those, that knew nothing of the naturall voice; and do put them into a misconceit, and fond opinion, that they have heard either some of the Fayries, or Satyres, or Nymphes, playing and sporting amidst the Woods.

As concerning those that are bred in the mind; They say, that for the innumerable course of Atomes; all whatsoever we do dream or think of, commeth incontinently into the spirit or mind, and sometimes passeth by Visions and Images into the bodily Eyes.

But if the Images be visible; either they are reverberated and beaten back, from the Chryſtall and transparent Ayre, exceeding clear in her ſuperficies; or they come of the Spoils and ſcales of naturall things. Touching the Ayre; That it may of it ſelf caſt ſome kind of Image, having power to appear, they prove it in this ſort; All Ayre that is Chryſtalline or transparent, hath a kind of refraction, as appeareth by the mirrour (whereof Looking Glaſſes are made and poliſhed) and by the water, and by a thick and darkned Ayre. And this do the Catoptricks themſelves reach in their principles; Now (by the compariſon and ſimilitude of the mirrour, and the water) all Ayre which hath a refraction, doth of it ſelf yield ſome certain form. And therefore it is not any thing ſtrange if in an Ayre a man may ſee certain forms and Images. And they do bring alſo this compariſon. Even as the Tapeſtry hangings in a Theater, or a large wide Hall, do caſt abroad round about, their naturall colour, where they find an Ayre oppoſed againſt them; and the more that the beams of the Sun do beat or ſhine upon them, the more bright and ſhining luſtre they carry with them; and ſeem to have caſt off and left their colour, in the ſame place, which is directly in oppoſition againſt them; So is it moſt certain, that the Ayre may of it ſelf caſt abroad certain forms and figures; the which look by how much the more they be made clear, by the light which doth bring and ſee them to our object, ſo much the more comprehenſible ſhall they be unto our ſight.

In brief, concerning the ſpoils and ſcales caſt from naturall things, of which, in their opinion, Images ſhould be engendred. They do make this argument; The Caterpillars (ſay they) do leave their ſpoils in the hedges or buſhes, like unto themſelves; ſo do the Serpents among the thorns or ſtones; and the little creatures, at the time of their birth, do leave behind them their after-burthen; which is a little thin and ſlender ſkin, which they bring with them, from their dammes belly. Why therefore may there nor be left or caſt from the bodies of naturall things, certain thin and ſubtill forms, or Images, proceeding from them as well, as a little ſkin and the after-burthen doth remain of the ſuperfluity of little Creatures? But all theſe Arguments may very eaſily be diſſolved.

And firſt, as touching the voyces, which they ſay, may ſimply be created of the Ayre; I will not deny that. For it is moſt certain, that the voice, is a certain beating and concuſſion of the Ayre, which falleth under the ſenſe of hearings, (as is affirmed by the Grammarians.) And the matter of the voice (as ſaith Galen) is the breath, and reſpiration of the Lungs; but the form thereof is the Ayre, without the which, neither can it be underſtood, nor can it be called a voice. Beſides I will not deny, but that the ſounds are raiſed within the empty Ayre, be it either by the winds, or by ſome other externall cauſe. But to ſay, that the voices, and the ſounds are naturall and adherent to the Ayre, as the Tide to the Sea; and coldneſſe to the Rivers; and heat to the Sun: It would then follow, that without any externall cause at all, both the voice, and the senses should be created in the Ayre, and should perpetually adhere unto the Ayre, as the Tide doth to the Sea; and cold to the waters; and heat unto the Sun. But so it is, that the winds are not alwaies in the Ayre; and the sounds and voices are external things, coming into the Ayre, by the means of some other subject; the which is nothing to neither in the Sea, nor in the Rivers, nor in the Sun: because that in the Seas the Tide; and cold in the waters; and heat in the Sun, are unseparably, and continually. And there is great difference between Accidents that are Separable, and those that are Inseparable. For the separable Accident as the Voyces and the Sounds in the Ayre, may be abstracted, and drawn from the substance of the Ayre, and yet the Ayre shall neither perish, nor be the sooner altered thereby; But ebbing and flowing cannot be taken from the Sea, but the nature thereof must needs be changed; Nor can the heat be separated from the Sun, but that he must then lose his light; Neither can the cold be severed from the Rivers, but that the quality and nature of the water must be changed; which cannot possibly be; because naturally water is cold. And these three Accidents, are inseparably knit to those three substances, no lesse, then blacknesse is to the Raven, and whitenesse to the Swan. Moreover, it is a far greater foolery, to say, that of voices articulated and knit together, the voices themselves should be bred and engendred in the Ayre: For that is not onely against the nature of the Ayre, but against all order established in the World. Neither is it to any purpose, to alledge for an instance, the voice of an Eccho: the which being carried in the Ayre, doth spread it self, and scattereth (as a spark from the fire) here and there; not onely towards the party that made and dispersed the sound, but to some other places likewise. For the voice of the Eccho, is engendred of the voice of the party, and not of the Ayre, and is dispersed (as themselves confesse) by the speech of the man, from whom it took its Originall and first beginning. Neither will I easily grant unto them, that the voice of the Eccho doth disperse it self on all sides, without losing it self, or being extinguished. For it is a thing very notorious, and sufficiently proved, that if the Eccho be dispersed into another place, then that from whence it first received her voice, she is no more discerned or understood as the voice of a man, but onely as a confused and uncertain sound; which ranging through the Vallies, cannot be discerned; but onely for a rebounding noise, and not otherwise. Now as concerning those Images, or similitudes, which the Epicures alledg to be created in the thought or conceit: saying, that the mind of man doth refer unto the eyes, whatsoever it dreameth, or thinketh on; and that by means of the abundance or concurrence of the Atomes. I do make them the same answer, which Cicero yielded them: that if the mind and the eyes do so symbolize and agree together in operations, that whatsoever the mind shall imagine and conceive, the eye may presently see; It must needs then follow, that some things shall present themselves selves to our eyes and sight, which never were in being, nor ever can be. For I may dream, or think of a Scylla, a Chimera, a Hippocentaure, and such like conceited fictions, which never were, nor can be. And I may faine unto my self, in my mind, strange Monsters, and Anticks; such as Painters do many times make, which neither are things, nor can possibly be. To be short, if this Argument of the Epicures were true; it must needs be, that all things whatsoever the mind presenteth, should be of a certainty: and they should fall so subject to our sight, as we might plainly and sensibly see them: the which is the greatest folly, that can possibly be imagined. Neither can they defend themselves with the continuall concurrence of their Atomes; which (they say) do unceasingly bring certain Images into the mind, and into the eyes of men. For, be it, that we should confesse, that their Atomes do slide into the mind of man: how can they conclude thereof, that they descend into the sight; nay, how can they descend; but that even by their own reasons, their ignorance and foolishnesse may be discovered. For, if their Atomes do enter into the mind, it must needs be then by that means, that they be Invisible; and that they do fly up and down very closely, and subtilly (as the very word doth also import.) Now if they fly invisibly in the mind; how can they of themselves so readily make any thing visible and apt to be seen? Certainly, to make their Atomes visible and corporall, there must be of necessity, beforehand, a great concurrence and huge heap of them drawn together; which cannot be suddenly done, but will require a great time. Now in the mean while that these Invisible Atomes shall be a gathering, and getting together into the mind, they will be flitting and flying away some other where, as soon as the mind (which never retaineth one thing very long) hath put them out of remembrance. So that by this means they have not any leasure to form themselves visible to the eyes of the body; but they return back again, even as they came at first, Invisible.

Now let us proceed, and passe on to those Images, which (say the Epicures) are reverberated from the Ayre, being clear and transparant in her superficies. I do agree with them, that the Catoptike, that is to say, the Speculative, (being one of the kinds of the Art Optike) doth hold, that the refraction, which is made of forms (be it either in a mirrour in the Ayre, or in the water) commeth either of the density and thicknesse of the mirrour, polished and made bright, the which keepeth sight, that it doth not disperse and scatter it self: whereas otherwise, if the mirrour were transparent, or had any pores, whereby one might see through it, the sight would disperse and scatter it self abroad: Or else it commeth of the thicknesse of the Ayre next adjoyning: or of the humid and moist concretion of the Water, which stayeth and limireth the beams of the eyesight. And that is the reason, why one may aswell see his visage in the water, as in a mirrour or looking glasse; and so also in the water of the Sea, when it is not troubled nor tossed with the Winds,

Winds, but refresheth calm and quiet; which Virgil testifieth in these Verses :

*Of late (upon the shore) I stood, my self beholding
In waters of the Sea, no stormy winds then stirring.*

But what will they infer of this, which every man will confesse to be true and infallible? So it is, (say they) that the Ayre being clear in her Superficies (like as doth the mirrour or looking Glasse); so will it yield of it self, some form or figure. Let this also be granted them: And what of that? Forsooth they conclude, that therefore in the Ayre, a man may see figures and Images. But who seeth nor, that this conclusion is ridiculous, and Sophisticall: For it doth not answer to the terms of their proposition; but simply carrieth away the Subject, without speaking of that, which is thereunto attributed, and which is the knot of the whole question. But I would know of the Epicures, how they can prove unto us, that by their Atomes the Ayre may naturally engender forms and Images of themselves, which should be visible: and, which should be moving and living, as the Specters are. I do assure my self, that they have not any arguments so good, but they may as easily be dissolved and avoided, as was the former. But they will say, perhaps; that we see often in the Ayre Comets, Fiery Flames, and other Prodigies. True; this I will not deny; but these things (which they say are seen in the Ayre) do not take their originall neither of their Atomes, nor of the Ayre; but are engendred of the vapours dried up from the Earth, as it is well known by the writings of good Philosophers. And the Ayre is susceptible and capable of them, by reason of some emptinesse in it; which doth easily yield and give place, and receiveth that which is sent unto it from below. Besides it is very evident, that such figures and Images as are seen in the Ayre, have not any life in them, as have the true Specters; the which also (the Epicures ought to shew by good reasons) to be carried to and fro, and to move themselves in the Ayre. For if they had attributed motion and stirring unto Specters; and had proved, that naturally, without having any Soul or life, they might notwithstanding be seen wandering, and running hither and thither in our form, or in any other; and that they are not onely to be seen in all parts of the Ayre, but in all other places whatsoever; then this might have stood them in great stead, to have impugned the Apparition of Specters, supernaturally, or against nature.

Moreover, if they will affirm, that the transparent and thick Ayre, receiving our figure by refraction, doth move it self as we do; and doth live and change from place to place, as we do; then must they also prove unto us, that the same should be a Specter; and not the Image of the object opposed thereunto, the which vanisheth away as soon as the same doth absent it self from it.

And

And seeing we are now in the discourse of Images, formed in a thick Ayre: It is to be understood, that their nature is to appear either by the refraction of our own naturall and proper form, or by reflexion. As touching their appearance by refraction, we have already spoken sufficiently: But as concerning those which are by reflexion: It is most certain, that their property is to appear by another form then ours: namely, of some lightsome body, which groweth into the thick and grosse Ayre, in the humid and moist coaction of the same; or into the Glasse of a mirrour, making a reflexion of that thing which is reverberated and beaten back again into our sight. Thus by way of reflexion may a man see within a looking-Glasse, those men which are walking and marching in the streets: And sometimes a man shall think that men are walking near the walls of his Chamber: which notwithstanding is nothing so; but that onely there is a reflexion of those persons whom we see aloof, walking and going up and down. So likewise by way of reflexion, may a man see in the Heavens sometimes a second Sunne, the Image of the true Sun; and so likewise of the Rainbow. Howbeit that this latter (as Aristotle would have it) is not any reflexion but a relation of the Aspeſs unto our eye-sight. But under his correction, that is not so: For if the Rainbow in the Heavens do not yield a reflexion to our sight, it would not be seen in the water, or in a looking Glasse, as it is, and as daily experience sheweth us. And this also may serve for a solution to that Argument of the Epicures, who by Comparison of the clothes of Tapistry, that imprint their colours in the wall opposed, would prove, that the Ayre may also cast any form or Image of it self. For the colours of the Rainbow, and of Tapistry-hangings, are for the most part lively colours, as Azure or Sky-colour, red, carnation, and green; all which do naturally cast a great lustre, which may easily yield an impression upon any solid thing, and may reflect unto our eyes. And yet nevertheless, I see not how this can be a good argument, to shew that the Ayre can engender forms or figures; which may refer themselves to the eyes, as Speſſers, and not rather, as Colours.

Last of all, touching that which the Epicures affirm; how, of the bodies of things do issue and remain certain Spoils: The same hath not any foundation upon naturall reason, or upon any apparance of truth. For, is there any likelihood, or probability, that if the creatures do leave behind them their after-burthens, or other such spoils, bereaved from them, in the places where they have been: That therefore the bodies (be they dead, or be they alive) do leave an Image, or impression of themselves, in their absence, after they are departed from those places? It is most certain, that the bodies of any creatures, have not any thing in them, which either in their life-time, or after that their substance is perished, can be abstracted or separated from them. For otherwise, of one body there should be two made; which were a strange thing, and altogether abhorring from nature. And were not much

much different, either from the Fables of the Poets, who of a dead body, made the abstraction of a shadow, which they called the Image and Idoll thereof, (as is affirmed, both by Sergius, and Lucian and the Commentator upon Homer) or else from those fabulous and idle dreams of the Rabbins, and Talmudists, which had their Nephes, as saith the Author of Zoar. But the truth is, that those Creatures which do use to cast their spoils from them, do leave no other then a thin slender skin, which being superfluous, is no more remaining or abiding with the body: Howbeit, that it cometh from the body: as appeareth both by the after-burthens of all creatures (wherein the young ones being wrapped and enfolded in the bellies of their dams, yet in coming from thence, do easily and naturally cast them off) as also by the spoils of the Serpent, or Snake, and by the skins of the Silk-worms, and the Caterpillars; the which superfluities, are drawn and cast off, particularly from these beasts or Creatures, as a mark to the one, to wit, the Silk-worms, and Caterpillars, that they do change from their former state, and to the other, namely the Serpents, to shew the poisons and ill beards and seeds, which they have eaten all the Winter, according as Virgil writeth of them.

These Arguments being thus finished: Let us now come to that which the Epicures affirm to be the cause why any should be touched and attained with fear; when they see such Images and figures, which they affirm naturally to sit and fly up and down. We (say they) are affected and altered, according to the things which we see, and which are next unto us. As for example; we perceive, I know not what, salt humour being near the Sea; and in touching of Wormwood, and of Rue, we find a kind of bitterness: and when we are near a Smith, we feel our teeth to gnash, and to be set on edge, at the noise of his File, or Saw, wherewith he worketh. So likewise, when these Images and figures do present themselves unto us, we cannot possibly abide nor suffer them; but we find our selves altered and changed in our understanding: howbeit some more then other some. For like as there be certain seeds within the eyes of Cocks, which shining and shooting into the eyes of the Lions, do so strike and pierce their eye-lids, and do inflict upon them such pain and grief, that they are constrained to fly from them, being not able to abide or endure the sight of the Cock; So are there some men, who have their senses so apprehensive and subtil, that they cannot hold from being afraid, when they see such vain Images and figures before them.

But hereunto we must give them this answer; that the fear which men have by the sight of Specters or Spirits, cometh in regard that the things are unaccustomed and admirable to the bodily senses; and not from any secret seeds, which are contrary to our nature, and much lesse from any natural passion; such as that is, wherewith men are touched, that abide near the Sea, or those that see Rue or Wormwood, or do hear the noise of a Smiths file or saw. For if it were of any natural passion that this fear proceeded; then would not the party terrified, be so contounded and astonished even in the very powers of the Soul, as it is commonly seen that men are, at the sight of Specters or Spirits: but rather he should be onely moved by a certain Antipathy or abomination (as Pomponatius calleth it) and would onely abhor and fly from that which he so feareth. Besides; things that are supernatural, do much more touch the senses of man, then those things do, which are natural. Neither are they to be compared with such things, as having a natural cause (howbeit secret) do happen to be seen daily and ordinarily. Now I say, that the cause of these things (though naturall) is secret. For Alexander Aphrodisiensis, speaking of the noise of the File, and how it setteth the teeth on edge, with other things of like nature, saith, that Nature hath reserved the reason thereof unto her own secret knowledge, not being willing to impart the cause thereof unto men. The like may be affirmed of the greatest part of those Antipathies, which being concealed from men, yet cannot come of any secret seeds, that are contrary or enemies to nature (as the Epicures doe) but are hidden in the secret Magazine or Storehouse of Nature, which hath not revealed or laid the same open unto any person. Who can tell the reason why the Conciliator, otherwise called Peter de Albano, did abhor milk? Why Horace, and Jacques de Emly could not abide Garlike? nor Cardan could away with Eggs. And why that Gentleman of Gascoigne (of whom Julius Caesar Scaliger speaketh) could not abide the sound of a Violl? And of this latter in Cardan you may read the History. The Physician Scaliger writeth, how he himself knew a Gentleman, his neighbour, which had in him such an Antipathy at the sound of a Violl, that as soon as ever he heard it (were he in any company, even of the best sort, and that either at Table, or elsewhere) he was constrained to forsake the place, and to go away to make water.

not

Now it happened, that certain Gentlemen having of a long time perceived and known this strange nature and disposition in him, did one day invite this Gentleman to dine with them; and having provided and suborned a certain Minstrel of purpose, they caused him to be kept close till the appointed dinner time, when being set at Table, they had so placed the Gent. in the midst of them, as it was not possible for him to get forth. Now as they were in the midst of their dinner, in came the Fidler, and began to strike up his Violl near unto the Gent. he that never heard the sound of that instrument, but was presently taken with an extream desire to pisse, grew into an exceeding great pain: for being not able to get from the Table, nor daring to lay open his imperfection to the whole company; the poor man shewed by the often change of his countenance, in what pitiful case and pain he was. But in the end he was constrained to yield to the present mischief, and to reveal his imperfection. He that should undertake to search and find out the cause of this so admirable an Antipathy, I assure my self he should be as long a time about it, as was Aristotle in seeking out the cause of the Flowing and Ebbing of the Seas, (whereof have written Gregory Na- xienced, Judaea Martyr, Enslaved, and others) and yet he could never learn the certain cause thereof.

But as touching the reason why the Lion doth fly from the Cock: It cometh not from any seeds that lye hidden within the eyes of the Cock, and which from thence, should strike into the eyes, and hurt the sight of the Lion: but it is by a kind of sympathy, whereof we have formerly spoken. By which also the Elephant doth fly from the Hagg, and the Horse from the Stout Tarantule; Or else it is, for that the Cock and the Lion, partaking both of them of the nature of the Sun (but the Cock more then the Lion); It happeneth that the Lion perceiving it, doth presently fly from him; as the valiant Hector is said to fly before Achilles, who was more brave and more warlike then he. Or else it is because the Cock, being a celestiaall fowly, and the Lion a terrestriall Creature, and of a greater metey (having the spirits more sensitive and bruta then the other) doth therefore by nature yield and give place, to that which is more excellent. And this reason seemeth unto me in some sort allowable: the rather, for that those Devils which are of a more materiall and terrestriall nature, and be called Devils of the Sun, do fly the voice of the Cock, as well as the Lion (as Isaiah teacheth us). And thus, in my opinion, you see sufficiently how all the Arguments and foolish dreams and fables of the Epicures, may be soon answered, and easily dissolved.

The Arguments of those which deny that the Angells and Devils can take unto them a body; Confuted.

They which do deny that the Angels and Devills can take unto them a body, do not aim at the mark to deny their essence, (as do the Sadduces;) but they do it onely to disprove and impugne their Apparition. For it is a good consequent; if the Angels and Devils take not upon them any body, then can they not appear: And if one should reply unto them and say; That in our spirit and understanding the Angels and Devills may give some shew and token of their presence. To this they have their exception ready: That things spirituall and intelligible and all sorts of Intelligences, do represent themselves by things that are sensible. We will see therefore by what reasons they endeavour to prove, that an Angell or a Devill cannot take a body unto them.

No Body (say they,) can be united to an incorporeal substance, but onely that it may have an essence and a motion by the means of that substance. But the Angells and Devils cannot have a body united in regard of any essence: for in so doing we must conclude, that their bodies should be naturally united unto them, which is altogether untrue; and therefore it remaineth that they cannot be united unto a body, but onely in regard of the motion: which is a reason of no sufficiency for the approving of their opinion. For thereof would follow an absurdity in regard of the Angels: to wit, That they might take all those bodies that are moved by them, which is a very great and grosse error. For the Angell did move the tongue of Balaams Ass: and yet he entred not in his tongue. And therefore it cannot be said that an Angell or a Devil, can take a body unto them.

To this Argument I answer, That true it is, that an Angel and a Devill, cannot (to speak properly) take unto them every body that is moved: For to take a body signifieth to adhere unto the body. Now the Angels and the Devils do take unto them a body, not to unite it to their nature, and to incorporate it together with their essence: as he that taketh any kind of meat for sustenance: much lesse to unite the same to their person: as the Son of God took upon him the humane nature: But they do it onely that they may visibly represent themselves unto the sight of men. And in this sort the Angels and Devils are said to take a body, such as is apt and fit for their Apparition, as appeareth by the Authority of Denis Ariopage, who writeth, that by the corporal forme the properties of Angels are known and discerned.

Again they say, that if the Angels and Devils do take a body, it is not for any necessity that they have; but onely to instruct and exhort us to live well, as do the Angels; or to deceive and destroy us, as do the Devils. Now both to the one and the other, the Imaginary Vision, or the tentation is sufficient; and therefore it seemeth, that it is not needfull they should take unto them any body.

I answer; that not onely the Imaginary Vision of Angels is necessary for our instruction, but that also which is corporall and bodily, as we shall shew anon, when we intreat of the Apparition of Angels. And as concerning the Devils, God doth permit them both visibly and invisibly to tempt men, some to their salvation, and some to their damnation.

Moreover they thus agree: That God appeared unto the Patriarchs (as is to be seen in the Old Testament, and the good Angels likewise,) as Saint Augustine proveth in his book of the Trinity. Now we may not say, that God took upon him any body, except onely in the mystery of his Incarnation. And therefore it is needlesse to affirm, that the Angels which appear unto men, may take upon them a body.

I answer, (as doth Saint Augustine) who saith; That all the Apparitions which were in the old Testament, were made by the Ministry of Angels, who formed and shaped unto themselves certain shapes and figures imaginary and corporal, by which they might reduce and draw unto God, the Soul and Spirit of him that saw them: as it is possible, that by figures which are sensible, men may be drawn and lifted up in spirit and contemplation unto God. And therefore we may well say, that the Angels did take unto them a body, when they appeared in such Apparitions. But now God is said to have appeared; because God was the Butt and mark whereunto by Vision of those bodies, the Angels did endeavour and seek to lift up unto God the Souls of men. And this is the cause that the Scripture saith; That in these Apparitions sometimes God appeared, and sometimes the Angels.

Furthermore, they make this Objection. Like as it is agreeing naturally to the Soul to be united to the body: so, not to be united unto a body, is proper and natural unto the Angels and Devils. Now the Soul cannot be separated from the body when it will: Therefore the Angels and Devils also cannot take unto them a body when they will.

For answer whereof, I confesse that every thing is born and ingendred hath not any power over his being; for all the power of any thing floweth from the essence thereof, or presupposeth an essence; And because the Soul by reason of her being, is united unto the body, as the form thereof; it is not in her puissance to deliver her self from the union of the body. And so in like manner it is not in the power of any Angell or Devill to unite themselves to any body as the form thereof; but they may well take a body whereof they may be the moving cause, and (if a man may so speak) as the figure of the figure.

They affirm moreover, that between the body assumed, (if I may use this word) and the party assuming, there ought to be some proportion and similitude; But between the Angell or Devill, and a body, there is not any proportion; for both the one and the other are of divers kinds, and by consequent both of them are incompatible together.

To this I answer, That if the proportion be taken according to the quantity, greatnesse, and measure, there is no proportion between the Angels or Devils, and a body; because their greatnesse is not of one and the same kind, nor of one and the same consideration. Norwithstanding nothing can let but that there may be a certain habitude of an Angell to a body: as of a thing that moveth to the motion, and of a thing figured to the figure, the which may be termed a proportion.

Another Argument they make, which is this: No substance finite (whatsoever it be) can have in any operations together. An Angell is a substance finite; and therefore it cannot both minister unto us, and take to it self a body together.

But this is easily dissolved: for I say, that these two operations, To take a body, and to serve in their Ministry, are ordained mutually to the Angels: and therefore nothing hindreth them, but that the Angels may use both of them at once, and together.

Again they inferre, that if Angells and Devils do take a body either it is a Celestial Body; or some other, having the nature of some of the four Elements. Now the Angels cannot take a Celestial Body, for that the Body of the Heaven cannot divide it self, nor cannot make any abstraction from it self: much lesse can the Devils have that power, seeing the Angels have it not. Besides, they cannot take unto them a body of Fire, for then they should consume and burn the body, near to which they do approach: much lesse can they take a body of the Ayre, for that is not figurable; neither can they take any body that is a moveable Element, and retaineth no form; nor yet by the same mean can they have a Terrestrial body; for we see it written how the Angels do very soon and suddenly vanish away out of sight, as it appeared by that Angell which came to Tobias. And the Devils also when they shew themselves in any Apparition, can in a moment withdraw themselves from the sight of men. And therefore being unable and unapt to take upon them any body, either Elementary or Celestial; it must needs follow that they appear not at all.

To this I answer, That the Angels and Devils may take a body of any Element whatsoever, and which themselves will; yea and of many Elements mixt together. Nevertheless it is most likely to be true, and the common opinion is; that they do soonest of all take unto them a body of the Ayre, by thickning the same, and forming it of vapours, that mount and arise from the Earth, and in turning and moving it at their pleasure, as the wind moveth the Clouds, being able to make the same to disappear and vanish away again whensoever they will, by reason that it is nothing but a vapour.

But yet this will not satisfy them, but they go further, saying; That every assumption of a body, is limited and bounded with some union: But of an Angell, and of a Body, there cannot be made any of those Three means of Unity, of which Aristotle speaketh; For they cannot be made one by Continuation, by Inseparability, nor by Reason.

To this a man may answer as before. That there is not any union in the assumption of a body by an Angell. For if there were a union, then in truth that which Aristotle speaketh, should be requisite between the Angell and the body which it assumeth. But there is not between them any union, save onely that which is of a thing moving to the thing moved, as we have before affirmed.

Again, the good Angels (say they) in appearing unto us, either do take True Figures visible and palpable, or such as are altogether false: if they have such as be true, it should then follow, that if they appear in a humane body, then they do assume a True humane body; But this is impossible, unlesse we should say, That an Angell may enter into the body of a man, which is a thing not convenient nor agreeable unto the Angelicall Nature. And if they have False Figures, this would be much more unfitting and unbecoming them: for that all feigning and dissembling, or any kind of fiction is very unseemly in the Angels of Truth. And therefore in what sort and fashion it be, the Angels cannot take any Body upon them.

To this objection I answer, That the bodies which the Angels do take, have True and unfeigned forms so far forth, as they may be seen and perceived by the senses, be it in their colour or their Figure, but not according to the nature of their kind. For that cannot become sensible but by accident. That therefore is no cause why a man should say, that there is any fiction and feigning in the Angels; for they do not oppose and set before our eyes humane shapes and forms, because thereby they would be thought and esteemed to be men; but to the end that by their humane properties, we should know the vertues of the Angels. And like as Metaphorous speeches are not therefore any whit the sooner to be reputed false, in which by the similitude of things, other significations are comprehended; So the figures and forms of Angels are not false, because they are are taken and assumed to the similitude and resemblance of men.

More then so (they reply) that the Angels and Devills by the vertue of their Nature, cannot work or create any effects within humane bodies, save onely by the means of their naturall vertues. But their naturall vertues cannot be in things corporall to form any Figure of a humane body, but onely by the usual and determined mean of Generation; to wit, by the seed naturally ordained to that effect: in which sort the Angells and Devills cannot take a body upon them. And the same reason and consideration is there of other figures of earthly bodies also which they take unto them.

But hereunto this answer may be made them, That albeit the natural vertues of a body, do not suffice to produce a true shape of a humane body, but onely by the due and ordinary mean of Generation: Nevertheless so it is, that the Angells and Devills are capable to cloath themselves, and to put on a certain similitude of humane body, as touching the colour and figure, and other such exterior Accidents, and that especially at such a time, as when it may suffice them by a locall motion to move any such bodies: by means whereof both the vapours are thickned, and again purified and made thin, as also the Clouds are diversly painted and figured.

But they object again, that this is not sufficient: But (they say) that it behoveth the cause moving, to infuse some vertue in to the body moved, but cannot infuse any vertue, except it touch it. And if it be so that the Angells have not any touching nor feeling with the body, it seemeth that then they cannot move it. And therefore it must needs be, that they cannot take upon them any body.

But it may be said, that the Angells by their Commandement onely, may move the body with a motion locall, which they give unto it in touching of it, not with a corporall kind of touching, but a spirituall.

Against this solution, they dispute further saying: It behoveth the mover, and the thing moved, to be connexed, and united together, as appeareth by Aristotle. But in saying that an Angell doth command any thing of his own will, it is to be presupposed that then he is not together with the body, which is said to be governed by him; and therefore he cannot move the body onely by his commandement.

Hereunto I answer; That the Commandement of the Angell doth demand an execution of his vertue and puissance; and therefore it must of necessity be, that there be some spirituall touching of that body by which it is moved.

They insist yet further, and say; That the Angells cannot move bodies with any locall motion: and that therefore in vain should the bodies be obedient unto them, seeing they should still remain remain immoveable. And to prove this they bring divers Arguments.

Their first Argument is taken from the Authority of Aristotle, who saith; That the locall motion is the principall, and most perfect of all other motions. Now the Angels (if it be granted that they take a body) cannot use any lesser or inferiour motions; it followeth therefore by a more forcible reason, that they can much lesse use any locall motion, which is the greatest, and the most excellent of all others.

But the answer is easy, and we say; That the Angels moving themselves with a locall motion, by the phantasmaticall body which they took, may also cause the other lesser motion, by using some corporall agents for the producing of those effects which they purpose; like as the Smith useth fire to soften the Iron, and to reduce it to that which they have an intention to make of it. And as touching that saying of Aristotle; That the locall motion is the chiefest of all motions; the reason thereof is, because every corporall nature having life, is apt to move it self locally by the means of the Soul, be it either reasonable or sensitive, which giveth life unto it.

Their second Argument is; That the locall motion of naturall bodies doth follow their forms; But the Angels are not causes of the forms of naturall bodies, and therefore they cannot be a mean to give them any locall motion.

Nevertheless, answer may be made them, That in bodies there be other locall motions then those that do adhere unto the forms: as the flowing and ebbing of the Sea, do not follow the substantiall form of the water, but the influence of the Moon; with much greater reason, therefore, may other locall motions (then such as adhere to the forms) follow spirituall and incorporall substances.

Their third Argument is; That the corporall members do obey to the conception of the Soul in a locall motion, in as much as they have from her the beginning of life; now the bodies which the Angels take unto them, have not from them the beginning of life; for then it would behove that the bodies and the Angels should be united together. And therefore it followeth, that the bodies by them assumed, cannot be obedient to any locall motion.

I answer, That the Angels have their vertue lesse restrained or hindred then the Souls, insomuch that being separated from all corporall massinesse, they may nevertheless take an Ayry body; the which they can move locally at their will and pleasure.

Besides all the former Arguments, they reply yet further, and say: That every corporall motion doth not obey to the command of the Angels, as touching the forming and fashioning thereof; now the figure which the Angels take, is as a kind of form.

And

And therefore by the onely Commandement of the Angels, cannot any body take any form or figure whatsoever, be it either of man, or of any other diuerse kind comprised under one gender.

To this the answer is, That the figure which the Angells take, is in very truth a form which is made by the abscision and dismembing (as a man may say) of the thickning of the Ayre, or by the putrefaction of it, or by the similitude and motion which may be taken of the same matter. But there is a very great difference between the Form and Figure that is made so accidentally, and that which is naturall and according to the true substance of a thing, the which cannot possibly be confounded with this accidental Figure.

This is not all which they object: for they say further touching the Devils: That if they do invest themselves with a body, then they ought to be within the body which they have taken. Now Saint Jerome interpreting that place of the Psalmist, The Lord is in his holy Temple; and the Glosse do say, that the Devils do command and rule over Images and Idolls externally, and cannot be in them internally; and the Idolls are bodies as every man knoweth. And therefore it cannot be said, that the Devils can take upon them any bodies.

I answer, That to be in or within a body of some substance, hath a double and twofold entendment of understanding. In the first sort it is understood under the Terms of Divinity. And in this manner, nothing letteth but that the Devill may be in a body. In the second sort it is meant according To the essence, as in giving a being to the thing, and in working man in it, which is proper unto God onely; howbeit that God doth not make a part in the essence of any thing; For God is a substance separated and abstracted solely and onely in it self. And for the further interpretation of Saint Jerome and the Glosse, which say, That the Devill is not in Images: we may affirm, that they do privily and closely reprehend the false opinion of the paynims and Idolaters, who made but one thing of the Idoll (were it of Wood, Brasse, or Stone,) and of the unclean spirit that remained within it; and by that means would have made a living substance of that which in its own nature was senselesse and without life, not having either hands to touch withal, or feet to go on, or tongue to speak with; except such onely as the Devill did seem to give unto it, by his deceitfull illusions.

To make short, they object this Argument also: If the Angells and Devils do take to them any body, either they are united unto The whole body, or to some Part thereof: If they be united one-ly to a Part thereof, then can they not move the other part, but onely by the means of that part which they do move. But this cannot possibly be; for otherwise the body assumed, should have such parts as should have the Organs determined to the motion, which is proper to none but living bodies. But if the Angells and Devills be United immediately to the whole body, it becometh them then also to possess every part of that body which they have taken to them; and so by that means they should be in many places, which is proper and appertaining to God onely: And therefore the Angells and Devills cannot take any body unto them.

To this Argument answer may be made in this manner; That the Angell or Devill so taking any body upon him, is wholly in the whole body which it assumeth, or else in a part thereof, as the Soul is in the body. For albeit he be not the form of the body which it assumeth, as is the Soul; yet so it is, that he is the mover thereof. Now it becometh that the mover and the thing moved, should be together; and it is nothing to the purpose to say, that an Angell or Devill, filling a body whole and entire of substance, can be in divers places: for the whole body assumed by an Angell or Devil, is not but in one place onely, albeit the same be admitted to have many members and many parts.

Thus far have I done my best, both to set down and to refute all the reasons and Arguments objected by those who deny that Angels and Devils can assume and take unto them a body; to the intent that from hence forth their mouths might be stopped, and that they may not esteem as fables the History of Specters, and of the Apparitions of Spirits.

But before I come to conclude this discourse, I may not forget to tell you how that many of the Rabbins and Jews which have taken upon them to interpret the holy Scriptures, have held opinion, and been of the belief, that those Angels which appeared to the Patriarchs and Prophets, did not appear in any body, nor did assume unto them any body to make themselves visible. And of this opinion amongst others was Rabbi Moses, one of the most learned Rabbins of the Jews, who said; That all that which is read and recorded in the Old Testament of the Apparition of Angels, did come by an imaginary Vision; that is to say, sometimes in sleeping, and sometimes in waking. But this position (as Saint Thomas of Aquine calleth it,) cannot prevail against the truth of the Scriptures; for by the phrase and manner of speeches which are usuall in the books of the Old Testament, it is easy to know and discern a difference, that which is signified and declared to have Appeared purely and simply to our eyes, from that which is said to be done by the means of a Prophe-ticall Vision. For when it ought to be understood, that any Apparition was made by way of Vision, there are some words put down and inserted, which do properly appertain to the Vision, such as the Scriptures do intend; as in Ezekiel, the Spirit of the Lord (saith he) lifted me up between the Heaven and the Earth, and led me into Jerusalem by the Visions of the Lord. I say therefore, that when it appeareth that things are said to be done simply, we ought to understand them as done simply and truly. Now we read in the Old Testament, that many Apparitions have been made in body: And therefore we ought to grant, that the Angells do sometimes assume and take unto them a body, in forming such a body as is sensible and subject to the external and corporal Vision, as well as some kind of shapes do form themselves in our imagination, which do produce an imaginative Vision, when we are sleeping. But this shall suffice touching this matter.
rition

FINIS.

THE TABLE.

A Table of the first Part of this Book, being the Apparitions of Devills, and Evill Spi- rits.

The severall heads are to be found by the figures in the Margin.

| | | | |
|--|-----|---|----|
| M Arcus Brutus his Vision. | 1 | An Apparition before the destruction of | |
| Marcus Antonius his Vision. | 2 | Antiochus. | 19 |
| Dion of Syracusa his Vision. | 3 | An Apparition to a Father of Sicily be- | |
| Alexander King of Scots his Vision. | 4 | fore the bursting out of horrid flames | |
| The Apparition of an old woman at Tor- | 5 | from the top of Mount Aetna. | 20 |
| tills in Parma. | 6 | A vision to one of the retinue of Dama- | |
| Antonius Urceus Codrus, his Vision. | 7 | scus going into Persia. | 21 |
| Jacobus Patricius of Venice his Vision. | 8 | The Vision of King Edward the third. | 22 |
| Curcius Ruffus, his Vision. | 9 | An Apparition to Aurelianus the Empe- | |
| Edwinus his Vision. | 10 | ror. | 23 |
| The Vision of Machabæus, and Banquo | 11 | The appearing of the Devil to St. Mar- | |
| Stuarr. | 12 | tin. | 24 |
| Hortharus King of Swedes, his discourse | 13 | St. Germans detesting of evill spirits | |
| with Nymphs. | 14 | which appeared in the habits of Men | |
| An Apparition to Julius Cæsar. | 15 | and Women. | 25 |
| Pelopidas Generall of the Theban Ar- | 16 | Menippus invited by the Devil in shape | |
| my. | 17 | of a maid, to a rich house. | 26 |
| An evill spirit forc't away by the sign of | 18 | The Apparition of the Ghost of a Fencer | |
| the Crosse. | 19 | to Iamblicus. | 27 |
| An Apparition to Matthæus the Great. | 20 | Julianus drove away Devills by the sign | |
| An Apparition of the spirit of Galeaci- | 21 | of the Crosse. | 28 |
| us to two Merchants. | 22 | A Mediolanenian Boor afflicted by a | |
| The Apparition of Ludovicus Alodifi- | 23 | Ghost. | 29 |
| us. | 24 | An Apparition to Comandrus before his | |
| Apparitions at a City called Come near | 25 | being drowned in the Hellespont. | 30 |
| France. | 26 | The appearing of a Succubus to Apelles | |
| | 27 | a Monk of Egypt. | 31 |
| | 28 | Darius Bishop of Mediolana, delivers | |
| | 29 | a house from the haunting of Evill | |
| | 30 | spirits. | |
| | 31 | | |
| | 32 | | |
| | 33 | | |
| | 34 | | |
| | 35 | | |
| | 36 | | |
| | 37 | | |
| | 38 | | |
| | 39 | | |
| | 40 | | |
| | 41 | | |
| | 42 | | |
| | 43 | | |
| | 44 | | |
| | 45 | | |
| | 46 | | |
| | 47 | | |
| | 48 | | |
| | 49 | | |
| | 50 | | |
| | 51 | | |
| | 52 | | |
| | 53 | | |
| | 54 | | |
| | 55 | | |
| | 56 | | |
| | 57 | | |
| | 58 | | |
| | 59 | | |
| | 60 | | |
| | 61 | | |
| | 62 | | |
| | 63 | | |
| | 64 | | |
| | 65 | | |
| | 66 | | |
| | 67 | | |
| | 68 | | |
| | 69 | | |
| | 70 | | |
| | 71 | | |
| | 72 | | |
| | 73 | | |
| | 74 | | |
| | 75 | | |
| | 76 | | |
| | 77 | | |
| | 78 | | |
| | 79 | | |
| | 80 | | |
| | 81 | | |
| | 82 | | |
| | 83 | | |
| | 84 | | |
| | 85 | | |
| | 86 | | |
| | 87 | | |
| | 88 | | |
| | 89 | | |
| | 90 | | |
| | 91 | | |
| | 92 | | |
| | 93 | | |
| | 94 | | |
| | 95 | | |
| | 96 | | |
| | 97 | | |
| | 98 | | |
| | 99 | | |
| | 100 | | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|----|--|----|
| Spirits. | 32 | The Athenians assisted against the Persians by one in the habit of a rustick fellow. | 52 |
| A wonderfull Spectrall related by Phlegon in his Book de mirabilibus et longævis. | 33 | Lightning fell down from Heaven upon the Persians at Minervaes Temple. | 53 |
| A Monk deluded by the embraces of the Devill in form of a beautifull woman. | 34 | Æacides assists the Greeks fighting against Xerxes at Salamin. | 54 |
| Vincentius his story of one who married a phantasm. | 35 | A naked child placed before an army in battle array. | 55 |
| Of a young Lady of the Countrey Marfa who kept company with an evill spirit. | 36 | Two unknown young men assisted the Locrensiens against the people of Sibaris, leading their army, upon milk-white Horses, and subduing their Enemies. | 56 |
| A woman who had accompanied the Devill in form of a man, being at Sea causeth a great storm. | 37 | Mercury, when a youth, leading some striplings, chased the Eubæans. | 57 |
| Of a Priest who had for forty years lain with an evill spirit. | 38 | Gastor and Pollux appeared champions for the Roman party. | 58 |
| Jacobus Rufus in his fifth Book, his relation of a woman ravished by the Devill. | 39 | Mars was propitious to the Romans. | 59 |
| The Devill had commerce with a Merchants wife seven Miles from Wittenburg. | 40 | Bacchus's feasts solemnized at Empusa, or Onacale, an evill Ghost sent by Hercate to them that are in distresse. | 60 |
| The Apparition of Benedictus the 8th, Pope. | 41 | In Lybia; shapes of severall living creatures. | 61 |
| The Apparition of Theophylact who called himself Benedict the ninth. | 42 | The Orthomeci their report of a Goblin. | 62 |
| The appearing of an ugly Ghost to Saint Martin Bishop of Tours, where an unknown Martyr was worshipped. | 43 | Parnassus a Hill in Boeotia. | 63 |
| Scopas and his companie's sudden death by the falling of a room upon them as they were feasting. | 44 | Gellus his maid who dying young, her Ghost walks at Lesbos. | 64 |
| The raining of ashes. | 45 | Temistæus his Ghost. | 65 |
| An Earthquake round about Palestine and Syria. | 46 | The Isle of Æga troubled with Phantasms. | 66 |
| The representation wherewith Theodoricus King of the Ostrogoths affrighted dies. | 47 | Spirits appeared at the death of Caligula. | 67 |
| A strange report by the Castrobians concerning Aristæus the Poet. | 48 | Nero after murdering his Mother, troubled with her Ghost. | 68 |
| The relation of one Leonard's going into a Cave at the City Basil. | 49 | Otho the Emperour troubled with Galba his Ghost. | 69 |
| Of a Swan which by a Silver chain fastned to her neck, bal'd a Bark along the River Rhene. | 50 | A Diabollall spirit appearing in the likeness of a wild Boar. | 70 |
| By Dianaes will, a great darknesse perplexed the Persians. | 51 | Hobgoblins driven away from haunting of a place, by the Sacrament and prayers. | 71 |
| | | The Devill appearing in the shape of an Angell to a Monk. | 72 |
| | | A demoniall spirit driven away, by devout Prayers and holy-water. | 73 |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|----|---|-----|
| Prodigious and wonderfull sights of divers kinds. | 74 | before Dunstan an English Abbot. | 92 |
| At New-Castle in the coasts of Finlandia, one in the night appears playing upon an Harp before the death of any Souldier. | 75 | The overthrow of the Sicilians made known to shepheards by the speaking of Spirits to one another in the night. | 93 |
| In Ilandia, an Island under the Artick Pole, a promontory like the Hill Aetna. | 76 | An Hermophrodite born at Aetolia. | 94 |
| Night-Ghosts representing an Army in a hostile manner. | 77 | Pompeius Galienus the stoutest man of Cæsars army. | 95 |
| In Cracoviensis a spacious lake disturbed by Evill spirits. | 78 | Castor and Pollux appear in the shape of two young gallants. | 96 |
| A Priest troubled with the Incubus or Mare. | 79 | The Devill transformed into an Angel of light, appeared to Rathbodus commander of Frisia. | 97 |
| Alexander his dead friend came to bed to him. | 80 | Valentinius the Arrian Bishop his dead Corps dragged out of the Temple by evill spirits. | 98 |
| Gordian and his comrades saw fearfull sights as they went to the City Arezzo. | 81 | A Monk adjures by vertue of the holy and undivided Trinity, spirits appearing like troops of armed men, to tell what they were. | 99 |
| A Devill seized upon one who had been a despiser of God, and disobedient to his Parents, but was driven from him by calling upon God. | 82 | A Ghost appeared to Cicero his Nurse. | 100 |
| The Devils appearing to Thomas Monachus in the shape of a Man. | 83 | The Prognosticks of the death of the Emperour Annus Tacitus. | 101 |
| The Devill appeared to a wicked young fellow, who upbraided, defamed, and taunted his father. | 84 | Constantius the Emperour his strange visions. | 102 |
| A spectrall in the form of a beautiful woman. | 85 | Marcellus the Bishop by earnest prayer repelled the Magick of the Devill. | 103 |
| The harmlesse spirits, called Lares; the cruel, Larvæ. | 86 | An innumerable company of spectralls amongst the Pilappii. | 104 |
| Mental-mines frequented with both kinds of spirits. | 87 | A noble Gentleman of Bavaria grieved for the death of his Wife, she appeared to him. | 105 |
| A tall woman of a most dreadfull countenance seen in the Ayre before a Massacre at Antioch. | 88 | Bruno Bishop of Herbiopolis, his Vision before his sudden death. | 106 |
| A Prisoner agreed with the Devill to be delivered out of Prison and view Hell. | 89 | The Devill in shape of a Monk walks in the Mountains of Bohemia. | 107 |
| One in form of a child breaking out of the ground, spoke as wisely as a Senatour to a Ploughman. | 90 | A Fisherman taking a Sea-Monster of the shape of a beautifull woman, married her, and had a child by her. | 108 |
| The Devill in the shape of a tall woman appeared to Drusus made Consull, and warring by the name of Augustus Cæsar. | 91 | A Satanical phantasm by the Devil in form of an Hare in the sight of Luther. | 109 |
| An Hobgoblin leaping and skipping | | Martin Luther his tale at a Supper. | 110 |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|-----|--|-----|
| The bodies of dead men entred by Devils, | 111 | command, | 128 |
| An innocent Fool brought an Infant safe out of the company of a multitude of Devils, | 112 | The dead Husband of a Kins-woman to Phillip Melancthon, appeared to her, | 129 |
| A Bird melodiously singing adjured in the name of Christ, confesseth herself a Spirit, | 113 | In the year 1555. a Spectrum appeared at Brunsviga, in the Village of Gehern, | 130 |
| Two noble men long before dead, appeared to Nicolaus Amsdorffius Bishop of Ciz, when he was a Priest at Maiden-burg, | 114 | Stephen Hubener a rich Citizen of Trawtenaw in Bohemia, his body after death entred into by the Devill, | 131 |
| In the year 1545. an evill spirit straggled about the City Rotwill, | 115 | The Devill in likeness of a man, enticing many children, stole them away from Hammel, | 132 |
| The Devill comes in shape of a man desiring a Priest to take his confession, | 116 | The Devill appearing, pretending himself the spirit of a deceased man, | 133 |
| The Devill appearing to a good old man upon his death-bed, was driven away by a Text of Scripture, | 117 | The Devill appearing in form of a dead man, and his appearing to a maid seeking commerce with her. | 134 |
| A Doctour of Divinity of Lower-Germany caught up by the Devill on horse-back, then into the Ayre, whence he was cast down, | 118 | A maid possessed by the devill, Prophecyeth, | 135 |
| In the lower Germany, a Monster of the bignesse of a man formed like a Dog, | 119 | A man troubled with the worms, spoke Dutch, a language utterly unknown to him, whereof being cured by a Physician, he was not able to speak a word of that language, | 136 |
| The Devill in form of a servant waits upon a nobleman who lived by plundering, | 120 | Exorcisms for the dispossessing of the devill, | 137 |
| Luther's relation of certain Monks, their employing the Devill in the Kitchen of their Monastery, | 121 | The devill speaks in a Maid possessed, | 138 |
| Crescentius the Popes Nuncio in the Council of Trent, his Vision, | 122 | In the wilderness of Tingut the voyces of devils are heard, | 139 |
| Spectralls after the death of a rich Epicure at Haberstade, | 123 | The devill speaks out of a Crow, | 140 |
| In the year 1559, in Mathia appeared Spirits in form of men without heads, reaping corn, | 124 | The devill disputed with Hieronymus Cardanus, | 141 |
| A notable Vision near Spira in the year 1530, on the 18th, 19th, and 20th, of July, | 125 | The devill out of a Crow predicted things to come, | 142 |
| Magdalena Crucia Hispania, of the chief City of all Corduba, Boetica, married herself to the Devill, whereby she performed wonders, | 127 | A most certain argument to detect one possessed, | 143 |
| The Devill appeared to a Clown to help him perform his Lords unreasonable | | In the time of Agyropolis Emperour of Rome a miserable dolefull noise was heard at the bottome of the Fountain Curena. | 144 |
| | | Calligraphus of Alexandria his Vision, | 145 |
| | | Hircanus Captain of the Jews had news by Oracle from the high Priest of his Sons victory, | 146 |
| | | A strange prodigy, | 147 |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|-----|---|-----|
| Cornelius of Patavia, an Augur, | 148 | A Monk of the Abbey Knerchtenstine, | 169 |
| One and the self-same day, a day of Trophies and fame too, in places distant 2500. miles, | 149 | One Brugus a woman, troubled with an evil Genius, | 170 |
| Solipatra of Alexandria wrapt suddenly by a fury, | 150 | Judith driven to Convulsion fits by the Devill, | 171 |
| An Egyptian Pilot as he was sailing to Rome, heard an unknown voice, which called him by his name, | 151 | Helena in a village called Loes near Audenhovia haunted with a Devill, | 172 |
| Monabazus King of the Adiabeniens, heard a voice as he lay in his Bed, | 152 | The Nuns of Venterus in the Countrey of Horn cruelly handled by an evil spirit, | 173 |
| A prediction to Nicephorus Phæus the Emperour, | 153 | The Virgins of the Monastery of Nazareth haunted with Devils, | 174 |
| A Prodigious voice called aloud to Opicinius Cacia Novaria, | 154 | A virgin of the Nunnery of Saint Bridget being mad, was mounted up into the Ayre by the Devill and strangled, | 175 |
| A confused murmur mixed with laughing, heard in the Theatre before Neroes death, | 155 | The Devill playing melodiously upon an Harp at the Nunnery of Neognagus, | 176 |
| A voice crying Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, in Eupilus Lake, | 156 | The Devill in shape of a Dog at a Colledge in the Colonienian Province, | 177 |
| Hircanus Captain of the Jews, his vision, | 157 | The Nuns of the Kentorpien Monastery infested by the Devill, | 178 |
| A voice to a vulgar man foretelling the approach of the French against the Tribunitian souldiers, | 158 | John Fernelius his relation in his second book of Occult causes, | 179 |
| A voice rebuking Lycurgus, | 159 | The Town of Schiltach in Germany set on fire by a Witch, | 180 |
| A voice calling to Cassius, and others, conspiring against Caligula, | 160 | A maid dispossessed of the Devill by the prayers of the Church, | 181 |
| Pettharis, King Arithperus his Son, warned by an unknown voice, | 161 | A Fishermans daughter at Urcad in Franckford, possessed with the Devill, | 182 |
| Chostilius Maucius Consul, going into Spain, heard a voice sounding in his ear, stay Maucius, | 162 | A Smiths daughter near Joakims valley possessed with the Devill, | 183 |
| The Devil was heard to cry aloud through the Temple, I have made this day quarrelsome, | 163 | The dead corps of a rich man entred into by the Devill at Trawtenaw in Bohemia, | 184 |
| Constans the Emperour, his death divulged by a voice in the Ayre far from the place where he died, | 164 | A Priests daughter tormented by the Devill, | 185 |
| Alchymists mocked by the Devill, | 165 | Bodinus his relation of Boyes and Girls, possessed, | 186 |
| The Devil seized upon a souldier who defrauded the poor, | 166 | John Vierus his relation in his fifth Book, of a maid possessed with the Devill, | 187 |
| A young man delivered from the Devill who haunted him in form of a woman, by fasting and prayer, | 167 | | |
| A melancholly maid fancying her self haunted with a Ghost, cured by Physick, | 168 | | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|-----|---|-----|
| The Lady Rosie from the eighth year of her age bound with an Evil spirit, | 188 | Govarus King of Norvegia skillfull in the Art of divination, | 213 |
| The Brachman Philosopher of India, | 189 | A relation how Magicians teach Husbands to make their wives hate Adultery, | 214 |
| Families in Africa who bewitch by immoderate praise, | 190 | Philometor his using Magicall verses, | 215 |
| Wizards at Rhodus, | 191 | Crata Regneri the wife of a Danish Champion, a witch, | 216 |
| Ephesian characters, | 192 | Clerus Sethus enticed a Virgin by a Persian Apple, | 217 |
| Magickall women banished to wildernesses, | 193 | Cajanus by Magick could transform himself into the shape of any beast, | 218 |
| The Northern Botnici Zappi and Finnonnes Magicians, | 194 | Italian women leibargized mens minds by some kinds of meat, | 219 |
| Zoroastes King of the Baſtrians thought to have found out the Art of Magick, | 195 | In Prussia, Livonia, and Lituania a great number of witches, | 220 |
| Hecate sprung from Perſes, her cruelty and immuity, | 196 | A witch foretold the issue of the battle 'twixt Uratisslaus Prince of Luca, and Grecomisslaus Prince of Bohemia, | 221 |
| Pafetis Fathing, a Proverb, | 197 | Apollonius Thioneus his strange cures, | 222 |
| Pythagoras his magicall whispering, | 198 | Magickall Incantments, | 223 |
| Simon Samaritanus his wonderfull arts, | 199 | Witches by the black art afflicted Duffus King of the Scots, | 224 |
| In Galeotide a man who did wonders, | 200 | Utolfus chief Ruler of the Helſingians, | 225 |
| Apollonius Tyanacus the Philosopher, | 201 | The Lappones and Finni their manner of revenge, | 226 |
| Sedetins a Jewish Physician, | 202 | Johannes Galleacius by Magick disabled to perform conjugal rights, | 227 |
| A Princeſſe a notable witch. | 203 | Pythagoras ſeen at Criton and Metapontus the ſame hour, | 228 |
| A woman ſtrangled and devoured a boy, | 204 | Apollonius vaniſhed out of the cuſtody he was under, | 229 |
| John Fernelius his ſtrange relation, | 205 | Jamblicus, praying, liſt up from the ground, | 230 |
| Facius Cardanus had an aeriall devill to his familiar, | 206 | Oddo Danicus a Pyrat, rowed up and down the Sea without a Ship, | 231 |
| James Jodoci had a ring wherein he thought the devill was tyed by exorcisms, | 207 | Othnius by Magick brought Hadingus King of Denmark, through a great part of the Sea, on horſeback, | 232 |
| Margaret the daughter of John Venerus of Eſſingenſis had her belly ſwelled to an immense greatneſſe by her Mothers means being a witch, | 208 | Theſperion his incantations, | 233 |
| The devill appearing in the ſhape of a man, calling himſelf Moſes, deluded many Jews, | 209 | The Image of Jupiter made by Magick to utter Oracles, | 234 |
| Archus an Indian wiſeman, | 210 | Appion, with the beaſt Cynocephalca prevails againſt all manner of witchcrafts, | |
| Apollonius his prediction, | 211 | | |
| Jamblicus returning from ſacrifices, | 212 | | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|-----|--|-----|
| crasis, | 236 | The Pythagorian sport by a Looking- | |
| The ghost of Achilles presents it self to | | glasse, | 265 |
| Apollonius Tyanæus, | 237 | A Chevalier swallowes a sharp dart, | 266 |
| Jamblicus raiseth out of Bathes two in | | Philumena the Harlot of Apelles the | |
| the form of beautifull young men, | 238 | Heretick, | 267 |
| A phantasm wrought by the Devil, | 239 | Magicians come out of Egypt to Byzan- | |
| A notable Prodigie, | 240 | tium, to shew their art, | 268 |
| The Bulgari use Magical devices, | 241 | wonderful tricks shewed by some of them | |
| The Hunni use inchantments, | 242 | for money, by others for ostentation, | 269 |
| Aquinus Prince of Norway useth in- | | Michael Sicidites, Magous Manuel | |
| chantments, | 243 | Comnenus being Emperour, would | |
| The Wood-Finni or Tores, | 244 | allow no such Sights. | 270 |
| The Magick-Vesture called Indusium, | 245 | Gregory the seventh his Miracles, | 271 |
| An enchanted Ensign, | 246 | In the cave of an Ile belonging to the | |
| Inchanted verses, | 247 | Ostrogothians strange Inchantments, | 272 |
| Empedocles the Magitian his verses | | Antonius Heliogabalus his Magicall | |
| concerning himself, | 248 | inchantments, | 273 |
| The Magick Idolary of the Persici, | 249 | The Emperour Arrian when he under- | |
| Theri Magicians alloy tempest by sacri- | | stood by Magick, that one whose name | |
| fices, | 250 | begun with Theta, should succeed him | |
| Inspired Persians walk upon burning | | in the Empire, commanded all to be | |
| coals, | 251 | slain whose names began with that | |
| A Virgin at Rome accused of incest, | | letter, | 274 |
| clears her innocence by prayers, | 252 | Andronicus Comnenus Tyrannus con- | |
| Armiplus an Egyptian Magitian, | 253 | sulteth a Magitian, | 275 |
| A Northern people called Finni, sell | | Euphrosina wife of Alexius Angelus | |
| winds to Merchants, | 254 | the Emperour, gave up her mind to di- | |
| Wicked blasphemous Priests, | 255 | vinations, | 276 |
| Near Elton Pagum, a spirit that vexed | | Theotecnus of Athens, an Inchanter, | |
| travellers, | 256 | and cruel persecutor of Christians, | 277 |
| Pelopon an Olympick Charrioter his in- | | Jason's Enterprize with fifty four more | |
| chantment, | 257 | young gallants, | 278 |
| Pythagoras made tame a savage Bear, | 258 | Johannes Teutonicus by Magicall art | |
| Apollonius Tyaneus his expelling of | | causeth Spectrum to appear. | 279 |
| Serpents, | 259 | An Arabian after drinking Cock's blood, | |
| The Abrathimins their Magitians cal- | | conjured an East wind for three dayes, | 280 |
| led Brachmans, | 260 | A young gallant of the Town of Gaza | |
| Fishers of Rotterdam deluded by witch- | | consulteth Magitians for the obtain- | |
| craft, | 261 | ing of a Ladies love with whom he was | |
| Pasetus by famous for his skill in Ma- | | enamoured, | 281 |
| gick, | 262 | Demetrius Spartanus deludes the peo- | |
| Numa the Roman King, | 263 | ple of Rome by his Magick for which | |
| William Earl of Holland made King, | 264 | he is worthily punish'd, | 282 |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|-----|--|-----|
| A Maid of sixteen years of age possessed with a Devil, | 283 | Athena, | 305 |
| Cardanus his Relation out of his fifteenth book, of one possessed with a Devill, | 284 | Martin Luther his tale of his Mothers being vexed with an Inchantress, | 306 |
| Vierus his strange relation of a Maid bewitched, | 285 | without the permission of God the Devil can hurt no man, | 307 |
| His wonderfull relation of an Husband-man bewitched, | 286 | Pope Alexander a Magitian, | 308 |
| Fulgosus his miraculous report of a religious man, | 287 | Of a Virgin, who instead of tears wept drops of blood, | 309 |
| Boccarius a noble Lombard, | 288 | A Magitian being banged, vanished away, and a bundle of straw remained in his stead, | 310 |
| Johannes Baptista. Porr. Neapolitan, his relation of a witch, | 289 | How to arm our selves against the power of the devil, | 311 |
| Jatcka his gift to Apollonius Tyaneus, | 290 | Of the commixtion and commerce of the devil with witches, | 312 |
| witches by giving men cheefe turn'd them into beasts, | 291 | A witch useth means to seduce a chaste Virgin to lie with the devil, | 313 |
| witches transforming men into beasts sell them to Merchants, | 292 | A young Virgin signing her self with the sign of the Crofs, driveth away devils, | 314 |
| Michael Verdunus and Peter Burgotus contrast with the Devil, | 293 | A woman prostitutes her self to the devil, | 315 |
| An horrible Earthquake in Norway, in the year 1348, | 294 | In the Brixiensian Diocess, a young wife bewitched to death, | 316 |
| A Bull charmed with Magical incantations, | 295 | A young Noble-man deprived by witchcraft of natural strength to beget children, | 317 |
| A Virgin of Bononia conversant with men two years after her death, | 296 | Devils appear in form of young gallants, | 318 |
| A studious young man of Sfordia inamoured of a Virgin, | 297 | A Priest who formerly thought there was no witches bewitched, | 319 |
| Andreas an Italian, a notable Satanicall juggler, | 298 | Barrenness in a family by witchcraft, | 320 |
| A dunghill Cock distiches, | 299 | A Mid-wife a Witch, | 321 |
| John Faustus carried about with him an evil spirit in shape of a dog, | 300 | A poor Labourer set upon by Gentlemen witches in the shape of Cats, which he grievously hurt, | 322 |
| The Devil comes to Frederick of Austria, being prisoner in a Castle near Naburg, offering to set him free, but he drives the devil away by the sign of the Crofs, | 301 | A woman to perpetrate her malice, traffeth with the Devil, | 323 |
| John an Almain Priest at Habersladium, a Magitian, | 302 | A woman afflicted with a Leprosie by witchcraft, | 324 |
| A Magitian who cut off his servants head, uniting it to his body again, | 303 | A witch infects an hangman with Leprosie, | 325 |
| Enchantresses who desired and endeavoured to destroy the fruits of the earth, | 304 | Incantments hid under the threshold of a door, | 326 |
| A Magitian of a Neighbour Town of | | A woman by constant and fervent prayers to Almighty God, delivered from witchcraft, | 327 |
| | | witches | |

THE TABLE

| | | | |
|---|-----|---|-----|
| Witches devote their Children to the Devil, | 328 | A woman accused of Witchcraft by her Husband, | 348 |
| Witches make it rain, hail, or cause a tempest at their pleasure, by the power of the devil, | 329 | A great company of Witches vanished away by a young maids calling upon God, who was seduced to their society, | 346 |
| A Witch causeth loathsome stinks, to the terrour of her apprehenders, | 330 | The devill obligeth witches by an oath to renounce God, | 350 |
| A witch being to be hang'd, spits upon the face of the hang-man, whereupon he fell down dead, | 331 | The devill seated upon a Throne, | 351 |
| The History of Job evidenceth the power of the devil, | 332 | The devill lyeth as men use to do with women, with a witch. | 352 |
| They who get unjustly, labour for the devil, | 333 | Confessions of witches. | 353 |
| A witch cures a woman afflicted with sickness, by praying to the devil, | 334 | Witches by their Husbands taken in the manner with the devil, | 354 |
| Witchcraft by Spells, and using of a sieve, | 335 | A Noblewoman of Spain seduced by a witch, had to do with the devil at eighteen years of age, | 355 |
| Two verses out of the Psalms being pronounced, no Butter will be produced by art, | 336 | A whole family bewitched to madnesse, | 356 |
| Ring-Magick, by putting a ring upon a bowl of water, | 337 | A woman by Magick cures Fevers, | 357 |
| Rod-magick. | 338 | A witch counterfeits holinesse, | 358 |
| Amasis King of Egypt so bound by Magick, that he could not perform Nuptial rights to his wife Laodice, | 339 | A witch who had bewitched a man, could not cure him again though she earnestly endeavoured it, | 359 |
| Witchcraft performed by tying of a knot many wayes, | 340 | A witch cureth the Horse of a Nobleman, and transfers the Horses disease to a servant, | 360 |
| A woman accuseth a Witch for binding her Husband, that he could not perform marriage rites, | 341 | A Magitian promised to transfer the disease of the father to his sucking Infant, | 361 |
| It passeth the power of the Devil to bind men from eating or drinking, by intercepting the power of their stomach, | 342 | A witch commanded by a Judge to touch a woman whom she had bewitched, falls down dead, | 362 |
| Insulanus Lord of the Novallians, desires to know the number of his dayes, | 343 | A Magitian bidding a man sick of a Fever, give it his enemy, he answering he had not any, but transferring it to the witch, he died, and the sick man recovered, | 363 |
| John Charterius an Historiographer, and Guilhelm a Doctor of Sorbon, condemned for Sorcery. | 344 | A great number of Witches burned for witch-craft, | 364 |
| A Normans Witchcraft detected by her husband. | 345 | A disease which comes to a man by a naturall cause, and not by witchcraft, cannot be cured by Magick. | 365 |
| A great Lady of Lugdunum, her witchcraft discovered by her stallion, | 346 | A house troubled with an evill spirit, | 366 |
| A Nobleman of Maldunum, who for curiosities sake went amongst witches, | 347 | A spirit in shape of a horse, kills twelve men, | 367 |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|-----|--|-----|
| The treasure Arcolius near Lutetia discovered by Magick, | 368 | The Devil in form of a great Hee-goat adored by witches, | 390 |
| A Lawyer and his companions seeking by Conjurations for treasure, are affrighted by spirits from their enterprise, | 369 | The admirable judgment of seven Magicians, | 391 |
| Satan deludes many by binding fast their eyes, | 370 | Baro of Razii who was condemned for using Magick, his confession. | 392 |
| A witch who enfeebled an Horse by witchcraft, | 371 | A most diabolical bloody Mid-wife, | 393 |
| A way to free Cattle from sorcery by using a sieve, | 372 | Cazereis a cursed witch of Tholossa, | 394 |
| Witchcraft, | 373 | A Magician who upon a sudden oftentimes flew, | 395 |
| A Mason tormented by witchcraft, | 374 | Articles against Egidius Garnerius, whereof he was accused and convicted, | 396 |
| White witches or those who cure and deliver from harm, | 375 | Peter Burgottus, and Michael Verdunus, their confessing their sacrificing to the Devill, | 397 |
| A witch cures a sick woman whom she had bewitched, | 376 | A witch taking the form of a wolf, wounded with an arrow, | 398 |
| A Sorcerer of Flanders. | 377 | Witches in the forms of wolves and Cats, | 399 |
| A Bishop bewitched, | 378 | The Lappi sell calms and storms, | 400 |
| Trifcalanus a witch whom the King of France pardoneth, confesseth the way by which sorceries are conveyed, | 379 | A Jew who at any time when he pleased could transform himself. | 401 |
| Satan enters a man mortally wounded, | 380 | Nothing more clear by History, then that many have been transformed into beasts, | 402 |
| A Butcher discovers many witches in a wood in the night. | 381 | An English Souldier at Cyprus turned into an Asse by a witch, | 403 |
| The confession of three witches who were condemned to dye for witchcrafts which they had committed, | 382 | A dialogue betwixt a stage-player and an Asse in Egypt, | 404 |
| The Sorcerers of Potezana their confession, | 383 | Two witches turn men into beasts, transform a Player into an Asse, | 405 |
| The confession of a witch at Biturgum, | 384 | Atheistical men turned into Ases, | 406 |
| The confession of a witch who could not rest unlesse she did some evil every day, | 385 | Witches raise lightnings, storms, and tempests, | 407 |
| The Devils declare what is done in divers Nations at a convention, | 386 | How a witch caused a storm, | 408 |
| There is no meeting of witches and Devils without dancing, | 387 | How some wicked Priests caused showers, | 409 |
| A witch anointing her self, lyes void of sense for three hours after, which returning to her body, relates things from divers Countreys. | 388 | How witches kill Cattle, | 410 |
| A witch departs from her body for a whole night to the convention of Devils and witches, and her spirit returns to her body in the morning, | 389 | Children killed in the wombs of their Mothers by witches, | 411 |
| | | A cursed witch Christeneth two Toads. | 412 |
| | | Witches with a powder kill Hearbs, | 413 |
| | | A witch who by his voice could kill men. | 414 |
| | | The | |

THE TABLE

| | |
|---|--|
| The Devil teacheth a Conjuror to shoot darts at a crucifix, 415 | A Conjuror in the sight of the people fly- ing up towards Heaven, snatch'd a hi- wife with him, laying hold on him, and a Maid also who stood by them, to the great wonder of the amazed people, who beheld them wavering in the Ay, 418 |
| An Hermaphrodite a witch attached, dis- covers the conjuration, conventicles, and diabolical acts of witches, 416 | |
| A witch at Laodunum who debilitated, and screwed men awry, and destroyed beasts and fruit, 417 | |

The Table to the Second Book, being of Oracles, Prophecies, &c.

The severall heads are to be found by the figures in the Margin.

| | |
|---|---|
| T He counsel which Telephus re- ceives from the Oracle at Delphos for cure of his wound, 1 | Maquel Comnenus after he had reigned 38 years excepting 3 moneths, hoping to prolong his life, put himself into Monastical habit. 12 |
| Croesus King of the Lydians consults the Oracle at Delphos, for the cure of his son being dumb. 2 | Polycrates the Theban consults the Oracle at Delphos for the finding of treasure, 13 |
| The Minyæ, the Plague raging upon man and beast, consult the Oracle. 3 | Plameticus encouraged by the Oracle, gains the King of Egypt, 14 |
| Athenienfis son of Craterus King of the Persians, consulting the Oracle, was told, That he should kill his own fa- ther, 4 | Maquel Comnenus Emperour, nameth his son Alexius, in observance of the Oracles doubtful speech. 15 |
| Oedipus kills his father according to the prediction of the Oracle. 5 | Boetia being spoyled, those of that Coun- trei who escaped, run to the Oracle, 16 |
| The strange death of Eumelus King of the Bolphorean Cymenians, 6 | The Teucric Cretensians seek themselves new habitations, by the advice of the Oracle, 17 |
| Cyrus King of the Persians, consults Orpheus his head at Lesbos, 7 | The Phrygians carried by Aneas their Captain into the Laurel field, were not willing to go any further, but hearkned to the Oracle, 18 |
| Polycrates the Samian Tyrant consults the Oracle at Delphos, 8 | The prediction of the Oracle at Delphos to the Lacedemonians, 19 |
| Great slaughter to happen revealed to Ju- lius Cæsar, by evident and wonderful Prodigies. 9 | Codrus King of the Athenians, in ob- servance of the Oracle, voluntarily sa- crificed himself for the safety of his people. 20 |
| Titus the Emperour his death foretold by the Oracle. 10 | |
| Mauricianus the son of Justinianus the Emperour being slain by the Goths, the Oracle was fulfilled, 11 | |

The

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|----|---|----|
| The Oracle predicteth the overthrow of the Athenians by the Persians, | 21 | A Shepherd, laid down by Orpheus his Tomb, falling asleep, chants forth Orpheus his verses in a sweet tone, | 43 |
| Valerius Torquatus swallowed up by the ground, in which place an Altar is built according to the advice of the Oracle, | 22 | The Scythian Islanders send the tenth of their treasures they get out of the silver and gold Mines, yearly to Apollo at Delphos, | 44 |
| To the Cimbrick warr the goddess, mother of great Iphæa, declared victory to the Romans, | 23 | An equivocal Oracle given to the Messenians, | 45 |
| The Oracle at Delphos declares victory to the Romans against the Vientians, | 24 | The answer of the Oracle at Delphos to the Phocenses, | 46 |
| The Dorians obeying the command of the Oracle, got Elea, | 25 | The Lacedemonians consult Pythia, | 47 |
| The Oracle's advice to the Lacedemonians, how to overcome the Tegeans, | 26 | Cleomenes King of the Spartans, consults the Oracle at Delphos, | 48 |
| An Oracle given out in the time of Tiberius Emperour of Rome, | 27 | Philomelus having taken the Delphick Oracle compells Pythia to tell him somewhat of future events, | 49 |
| The Devil speaketh in the Idol of Lemus, | 28 | The Oracle's answer to Cræsus at Delphos, | 50 |
| An Oracle given to the Ancestors of Sardanapalus, | 29 | Arcefilaus being driven from his Kingdom, sent to Delphos, to consult the Oracle, | 51 |
| An Oracle given to the Poet Hesiod. | 30 | Nero the Emperour, warned by Mathematicians, that the ruine of the Empire was portended by the Stars. | 52 |
| Epaminondas his charge from the Oracle at Delphos. | 31 | Xerxes the son of Darius finds an Urn, | 53 |
| The Oracle given to Cambyſes the Persian King. | 32 | Silvester the Pope reported to have obtained the Popedome by evils works, | 54 |
| Pythia predicteth the death of Philip King of Macedon, | 33 | whas encouragement the Æginetians received by the Oracle at Delphos to warr, | 55 |
| The doubtful Oracle given him at Delphos, | 34 | The wisdom of the Persian Magies, | 56 |
| Æcylus the Athenian tragick Poet, his death foretold by the Oracle. | 35 | An huge beard groweth upon the chin of the Priest of Minerva at Pedefensia, upon a sudden, immediately before a diverse fortune seizeth upon the people, | 57 |
| Daphidas the Sophister ironically consults the Oracle at Delphos. | 36 | Beleses a Chaldean encourageth Arabes General of the Medes, to invade the Babylonians, | 58 |
| Dionysius senior, Tyrant of Syracuse, acted a Tragedy to the Athenians in their Bacchanalian feasts. | 37 | Thales the Milesian discovers the plenty one year, and scarcity another, by the rising of the seven Stars, | 59 |
| Fatal necessity unavoidable, | 38 | Boetius the son of a common cryer, his fortune told by a Chaldean, | 60 |
| Hannibal the famous Carthaginian Captain, his death predicted by the Oracle. | 39 | | |
| Appius Claudius consults the Oracle, | 40 | | |
| The Antianzan Oracles their advice to C. Caligula, | 41 | | |
| Parthorius foretold by the Oracle to succeed in the Empire, | 42 | | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|----|---|----|
| The birth-day of the Emperour Augustus, observed, | 61 | An Astrologer foretells Rodolphus the Halpurgenſian Earl his being Emperour, | 78 |
| Scribonius the Mathematician, | 62 | The Mathematicians predicted Sfortia his high Empire, | 79 |
| Tiberius Cæſar makes uſe of Thraſylus, a cunning Chaldean, | 63 | Braccius the Monteneniſian Duke, ſeeing the body of his Enemy Sfortia drowned, praiſed him with exquisite Encomiums, | 80 |
| Claudius the Emperour predicteth the time of his own death, | 64 | Henry a Bohemian an Aſtronomer, his predictions, | 81 |
| An Aſtronomer foretold Nero his being Emperour, and his killing his Mother at the time of his birth, | 65 | Baſil a Southſayer foretells the death of Alexander Medices Duke of Florence, | 82 |
| Alcletario a Mathematician, foretelleth his own death. | 66 | John Liechrenberg his prediction, | 83 |
| Domitian the Emperour, ſuperſtitiouſly given to Mathematical predictions, | 67 | The tenth day of September fatal to Peter Alois, | 84 |
| Hadrian the Emperour, an excellent Aſtronomer, | 68 | Brazen tables wherein was engraven a prediction, That the Grecians were to overcome the Perſians, | 85 |
| Septimius Severus Pertinax a ſkilfull Mathematician, | 69 | A wonderful thing in the ſecond Carthaginian war, | 86 |
| A Midwife of Conſtantinople at the birth of Ablabius, foretells his being Prætor, | 70 | Verses found in a table of ſtone, when the walls of Chalcedon were made equal with the ground, | 87 |
| Two Jews, Aſtrotlogers, promiſe Zira Prince of the Arabians Empire, and long life, if he would demolish the Chriſtian Temples and Images of Saints, | 71 | A table of ſtone found in the bank of the River Scirtus, with Hieroglyphical Egyptian letters written on it, | 88 |
| The advice of John, an Aſtronomer and Magician to Lucapenus the Roman Emperour, | 72 | Chaldeans foretell Alexander's danger if he went to Babylon, | 89 |
| Nicolas ſon to Guido Earl of Patavia, predicted perdition to his Countrey, by Jambonus Andreas, an Aſtrotlogian, | 73 | What Aretas King of the Perſians gathered by Southſayings, | 90 |
| Guido Bonatus foretold the Earl of Mountferrat, that he ſhould receive a wound in his Hip, by a ſalley which he ſhould make the day before the Calends of May, | 74 | Apollonius an Egyptian foretold the death of Caius Caligula the Emperour, | 91 |
| Antiochus Tibertus foretells Guidon, that he ſhould be killed by his intimate friend, upon ſuſpicion of Inſidelity, | 75 | Apollonius foretold Cilix his ſlaughter, | 92 |
| Petrus Leonius, a dextrous Aſtronomer, diſcovered, by his Art, that ſudden death was portended to him by water, | 76 | Larginus Proclus foretells the death of Domitian the Emperour, | 93 |
| Predictions by Bartholomeus Coſlecles, an excellent Phyſiognomiſt, | 77 | The death of Conſtance diſcovered by a Souldier obſerving the intrals of beaſts and birds, | 94 |
| | | Alexander Severus Emperour, aſſiring to begin his ſpeech to his Souldiers with a lucky word, Fortune brought him one clean contrary, | 95 |
| | | A woman meeting the two Maximines in the Market-place, falls dead, | 96 |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|-----|---|-----|
| Dioclesian his being Emperour is fore- told by a woman, | 97 | should conquer the name of the Atheni- ans. | 118 |
| Marian a most wise Earl his predictions, | 98 | Philumena a Soothsaying maid, | 119 |
| A Soothsayers prediction to Agilulph Duke of the City Taurina, | 99 | Saint Augustine reports of Albigertus, that he knew all secrets, | 120 |
| Antonine his prediction to his Schollers, | 100 | Basilacius a man of an unaccustomed life a fortune-teller. | 121 |
| Remex a Rhodian, his prediction, | 101 | Merlin begotten by a spirit called Incu- bus, and a Brittain Noblewoman, fore- told many things to come, | 122 |
| An old Proverb in Carthage, | 102 | An unclean spirit having possessed Jaco- ba, speaks in her, | 123 |
| Spartan guests ravish the daughters of Scedalus. | 103 | A notable Impastor of Peter Brabantius who as oft as he pleased spoke from the bottom of his belly without moving his lips. | 124 |
| The Speech of a Magitian of Egypt to An- thonie, | 104 | Amphiarus a soothsayer, by the gaping of the earth swallowed up, with his Cha- riot and Horses, | 125 |
| * The Roman Captains forbid to go with weapons beyond Ctesiphon, by reason of an ancient Prophecie, | 105 | Actius Navius a shepherd boy, a sooth- sayer, | 126 |
| Sybill her Prophecie of the destruction of Antichrist, | 106 | Posthumus the Sooth-sayer, | 127 |
| The god Ammon answereth the Temen- tes, | 107 | Spurina foretells to Julius Caesar his danger of being killed. | 128 |
| Sybill foretells the warlike glory of the Macedons, | 108 | A German Prophecie to Agrippa then prisoner, his deliverance, and fu- ture prosperity, | 129 |
| A Child having teeth speaketh the same day in which he is borne. | 109 | The Adelittans and Almogonens di- vine from the flying of Birds, and meet- ing of wild beasts, | 130 |
| A Child within twenty four hours of its birth spoke and made signs with its hands, | 110 | Alexander the Emperour given to riot and Magick, | 131 |
| A Syrian seeing a ship running with full sayles, foretold it should be sunk, | 111 | Simeon Duke of the Bulgarians. | 132 |
| Phericides foretold an earthquake with- in three dayes, | 112 | An Idoll built by Mahomet, whereunto a legion of Devils are engaged by Ma- gick, to which Christians cannot come without danger, | 133 |
| The answer which the Oracle at Delphos gave to Glaucus enquiring counsell concerning unjustly deteyned money, | 113 | The manner how the Biarmians, Bothy- nians, Finlanders, divine, | 134 |
| Alphonfus King of Arragon besieging Neopolis, had the taking thereof fore- told him by a man of a reverend aspect, | 114 | How Jannes the master of Theophilus the Emperour, foretold things to come, | 135 |
| women who gussed at things to come, by whirl-pools and noyse of waters, | 115 | Apollonius the Emperour slain at Rome by Stephen according as Apollonius spoke in an ecstacy at the instant of his death at Ephesus. | 136 |
| Abaris of Scythias a divine of the Hy- berboreans, | 116 | Stephen the Hagio-Christophorite, knew from the Devill by Sethus a Ma- gitian, that destruction hanged over the | |
| Edesius the son of Chrysanthus had a body so nimble that it exceeded humane belief. | 117 | | |
| Agias divined unto Lyfander that he | | | |

THE TABLE.

| | |
|---|--|
| the head of Andronicus Comnenus, | A Magpy sits on the head of Coelius |
| 137 | Pontius declaring the Law, 155 |
| William King of the Romans dying | At Alexander the great his expedition |
| unfortunately and suddenly, was buried | into Asia, a Cyprus Tree sweateth, |
| in a Tomb in Frisia, which had stood | 156 |
| long beautified, without any man bur- | The Siracusians besieged, perform so- |
| ried, because it was Prophesied that a | lemn rights to Hercules. 157 |
| King of the Romans should be laid | Prodigies appear when Lucius Sylla |
| therein, 138 | went with an army to the Sociall war, |
| Two brothers not knowing one another, | 158 |
| kill each other as a Soothsayer foretold | The Hilt of P. Scipio Africanus his |
| them, 139 | Sword springs with blood, 159 |
| Sighuene King of Swethland as he sa- | A Ram with one Horn sprung out of the |
| crificed, understood that by fatall neces- | middle of his forehead, brought to Peri- |
| sity, he was to die by Gold, 140 | cles. 160 |
| Two Snakes found in the bed of Sempro- | The Chaldean Prophets foretel the trans- |
| nus Gracchus. 141 | lation of the Persian Empire to the Ma- |
| The Soothsayers answer to Marcellinus, | cedonians. 161 |
| 142 | The Buckler of Maximinus the father |
| Agigulph a Soothsayer, counsellis Antha- | set on fire by the Sun, and his spear |
| ris King of the Longobards, to take | struck by a Thunderbolt, 162 |
| Tolinda the Virgin to wife, 143 | A Martin flying amongst a Navy of |
| Batabaces Priest of the great mother | Ships, lighted upon the very top of the |
| Idea, fore-shew's a great victory to the | Stern of the Ship wherein Dion was, |
| people of Rome, 144 | 163 |
| A Madman from Bellona, shews to L. | an Eagle snatcheth a spear from one of |
| Sylla, that he should obtain the palm of | the guard of Dion wherewith sublimely |
| conquest, 145 | mounting, at length she let it fall into |
| The builders of Ephesus consult the Ora- | the deep, 164 |
| cle for direction where to erect it, 146 | The suburbs of Sardis filled with Snakes, |
| The Locrians wooden Dog, 147 | which the Horse of Croesus King of |
| Melanthus a banished man from his | the Lydians going to Grasse, devours, |
| country, received an Oracle, 148 | 165 |
| The Oracle Apollo Pythius directis | The Sacrifices offered by Dionysius the |
| Pausaniās where to build Byzantium, | younger to the gods, portend great pro- |
| 149 | digies, 166 |
| A Sow that had Pigs, made a divination | Tarquinius Superbus his dream, 167 |
| to the Trojans of building a City, 150 | Strange sights appear to Hippocrates the |
| Tarquinius Superbus his founding the | most valiant Duke of Athens, 168 |
| Temple of Jupiter, Iuno, and Miner- | Statues sweat, with divers other formida- |
| va, 151 | ble prodigies, 169 |
| Alexander a Priest of Minerva, Pro- | The prodigious return of a child almost |
| phesies to Alexander that he shall be a | born, to his Mothers belly again, 170 |
| Conquerour, 152 | Archelaus Tetrarch of Judæa and Idu- |
| The interpretation of a divination by | mea, his dream, 171 |
| Calchas a Prophet, 153 | The Ensign of Barnabās, Lieutenant- |
| Aristander the diviner, his interpreta- | Governour, shattered with a Thunder- |
| tion of a Crow's flying when Alexander | bolt. 172 |
| the Great assaulted Gaza. 154 | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|-----|--|-----|
| Zeno the Emperour flees to a little Castle upon an Hill called Constantinople, | 173 | Hadrianus Cornetanus Cardinal, conceives hope of obtaining the Papacy by the Oracle of a Fortune-telling woman, | 180 |
| Frederick the second told by one who had a familiar spirit, That he should die at the Florentine field, | 174 | Demophon's advice to Alexander, given from his observations in Augury, | 181 |
| Adelheida, a Lady of the noble blood of the Tuscans, of so high a wit, by observing the Heavens and Stars, that she foresaw things to come, | 175 | A certain Syrian whose name was Eunus, who delighted in Magical enchantments, | 182 |
| A fortune-teller's prediction to Machabæus King of the Scots, | 176 | Megistus Arcanas his Prophecy, | 183 |
| Antonius of Leva animates Charles the fifth, Emperour, to war upon France, | 177 | Domitian the Emperour commands Allectario to be burnt, and Larginus Proclus to be hang'd, for that they foretold the day of his death, | 184 |
| A Soothsayer's prediction to Amilcarus Duke of the Carthaginians, | 178 | Perusinus the greatest Magitian of all Italy, | 185 |
| The Velitri consult an Oracle, | 179 | | |

The Table of Dreams, Visions, Revelations, &c.

The severall heads are to be found by the figures in the Margin.

| | | | |
|--|----|--|----|
| J upiter sendeth a dream to Agamemnon, | 1 | by Oracle to Plutarch an Athenian, | 11 |
| Cyrus King of Persia his dream, | 2 | Themistocles his Vision, | 12 |
| Socrates foresaw in his dreams, that his Scholler Plato would be an excellent Orator and Philosopher, | 3 | Lucullus going to Hellespont, his Vision, | 13 |
| Hippocrates his dream, | 4 | Marcorius, a Physitian of Augustus Cæsar, his dream, | 14 |
| Alexander descended from Hercules by Carinus, and from Æacus on his Mothers side, by Neoprolemus; his dream, | 5 | Laodice the wife of Seleucus, her dream, | 15 |
| Sophocles his dream, | 6 | Publius Decius, Tribune of the Roman Souldiers, his dream, | 16 |
| Æneas Seneca his dream, the night after he undertook the Tutorship of Seneca, | 7 | Gracchus, brother of Tyberius his dream, | 17 |
| Fudemus a Cyprian his dream, | 8 | Calphurnia, wife of Julius Cæsar, her vision predicting his death, | 18 |
| Aspatia the daughter of Hermotimus, her dream, | 9 | Cornelius his foresight of his death, | 19 |
| The Mother of a certain Souldier, her dream, | 10 | A beholder of Playes, his dream, | 20 |
| Æsculapius of Athens his prescription | | Great Sfortia his dream, | 21 |
| | | Malgepa, an Archer to Galeacius Sfortia, his dream, | 22 |
| | | Mark | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|----|--|----------|
| Mark-Anthonie Taurell, Duke of Guastella his dream, | 23 | Quintus Catulus his vision, | 46 |
| Horace Perusine, servant of Alexander Medices Duke of the Florentines, his dream, | 24 | Vespasian the Father, his Vision, | 47 |
| Baptista & Cardanum his Vision, with a voyce speaking to him at the instant of his Mothers death, she dying far distant from the place where he had this vision. | 25 | Julian his Vision the night before his being declared Emperour, | 48 |
| Ulysses his contrary dreams, | 26 | Stipo the Philosopher his vision, | 49 |
| Mandarus a Lyrick Poet his dream, | 27 | Hippias the sonne of Pisistratus his dream, | 50 |
| Phail King of the Phocians, his dream, | 28 | The Mother of Dionysius of Syracuse, her vision when she conceived him, | 51 |
| Aristomenes King of the Messenians, his dream. | 29 | Astyages Cyrus his dreams, | 52 |
| Alexander King of Macedonia, understood by a dream, that the right hand of Cassandra would prove mortal to him, | 30 | Cyrus King of the Assyrians, his dream, | 53 |
| Alcibiades his dream, | 31 | Antigonus his dream concerning Mitridates, | 54 |
| King Croesus his Vision. | 32 | Arcea, Mother of Augustus Cæsar, her Vision. | 55 |
| Polycrates daughter of a Tyrant of the Samians, her vision, | 33 | Octavius his dream concerning his son Octavius. | 56 |
| Verses presented unto Hipparchus, son of Pisistratus in his sleep. | 34 | Vespasian his confidence of his sons succeeding him. | 57 |
| The like dream had Simon of Athens, | 35 | Adrian his vision before his being ordained Emperour, | 58 |
| Socrates his construction of a verse of Homer read unto him, | 36 | Alexander's visions whilest he assaulted the City of Tyre, | 59 |
| Aterius Rufus a Roman Knight, his vision, | 37 | Eumenes his wonderful vision. | 60 |
| Julius Cæsar not long before he was murthered, seemed to himself in his sleep sometimes to fly above the clouds, sometimes to joyn his right hand to Jupiter, | 38 | The Priests of Proserpina their vision, | 61 |
| Heliu Cuma, one of Cæsar's friends, his most fearful dream the night before his murther, | 39 | Hannibal Captain of the Carthaginians, his vision. | 62 |
| Nero affrighted with dreams and evident signs of things to come, | 40 | Amandatus, servant of Mardonius, his vision, | 63 |
| Galba the Emperour his dream a little before his death, | 41 | Xerxes his dreams. | 64 |
| Domitian his dreams immediately before he was slain. | 42 | The Spartans, Collicratidas being Captain, about to fight with the Athenians, the Soothsayers dissuade them, | 65 |
| Anthony Carocalla Emperour, his vision a little before he was murthered, | 43 | Pyrthus King of the Epirots, his dream when he besieged Sparta. | 66 |
| Himerea her vision, | 44 | Mitridates his vision, which foreshewed things to come. | 67 |
| Cicero his vision. | 45 | Cneius Pompeius his vision before the Pharsalian fight. | 68 |
| | | Hecuba when she was great with child of Paris, her vision, | 69 |
| | | Cambyses King of the Persians, his vision. | 70 |
| | | Darius moves out of Susa, against Alexander, encouraged by a dream, | 71 |
| | | Qq9 | Domitian |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|--|----|--|----|
| Domitian his dream, | 72 | his vision, | 77 |
| Eziline, surnamed Monk, a bloody Tyrant, his terrible vision, | 73 | Juno appears to Hannibal Captain of the Carthaginians, | 78 |
| The Mother of Phalaris her vision, | 74 | Valens the Emperour his vision, | 79 |
| Amilcar Captain of the Carthaginians, his dream falsely expounded, | 75 | Hippias son of Pisistratus, his vision, | 80 |
| Jupiter appears to T. Larinus, a man of the common people, | 76 | Sabbacus King of the Ethiopians, his vision, | 81 |
| Changius first Emperour of the Tartars, | 78 | Sethon King of Egypt, Priest of Vulcan, his vision, | 82 |

The Table of Mocks of the Devil, to strengthen the Idolatry of the Gentiles.

| | | | |
|---|----|--|----|
| T he power of Vesta, | 1 | Olive-Trees dedicated to Pallas, | 17 |
| Aeneas placeth household-gods, brought from Troy at Lavinium, | 2 | Æsculapius reported not to be born of the Nymph Coronis, but of an egg of a little Crow, | 18 |
| The Egyptians worship Isis for her Miracles, | 3 | Jupiter's anger for Antonius Maximus his cruelty to his servant, | 19 |
| In the Temple of Æsculapius amongst the Epidaurians, those who pray to the god sleeping, learn the reason of recovering health, | 4 | The Argonautes tossed with a Tempest, call upon Orpheus, | 20 |
| Aristides a Rhetorician of Smyrna, commanded by Æsculapius, | 5 | Thopinius and Agamedes build a Temple to Apollo, | 21 |
| An Ensign speaketh with a low voice, | 6 | Cirostus King of the Persians overcome by Cyrus, invokes Solon, | 22 |
| A whale of an incredible bigness swimmeth to a bulwark in the Sea at Tyre, | 7 | The Athenians received by Oracle, that they should invoke the North wind to help them, | 23 |
| The god Pan promiseth to aid the Athenians in the fight at Marathon, | 8 | A Vulcanian hillock near Agrigentum, | 24 |
| Strange Visions at Cyzicum, Minerva was seen in visions to many, | 9 | Romulus vows to build a Temple to Jupiter, | 25 |
| The Boetians their dream when enslaved by the Thracians, | 10 | Numa Pompilius his devotion to Jupiter, | 26 |
| The King of the Spartans after the Argians were vanquished, sacrificeth in Juno's Temple, | 11 | Tullius Hostilius vows to sacrifice Samians to Mars, | 27 |
| The Image of Victory which stood in Minerva's Temple, turns its back towards the door, | 12 | Counterfeiting of piety, | 28 |
| The Images of gods appear not only in the night, but in the day, commanding every one to pray, | 13 | A Miracle manifested about Claudius, | 29 |
| Before the demolishment of Troy, the fire in Minerva's Temple spares to burn the sacrifices, | 14 | Adrian punished for his unjust shedding of blood, | 30 |
| Cæsar Augustus his vision, | 15 | The Oracle from Pythia to the Athenians, infected with the Plague, | 31 |
| Ladened Ships could not arrive at Byzantium, | 16 | Apollo answers the Grecians, | 32 |
| | | Hercules the son of Alcmena, offers sacrifice to Jupiter, | 33 |
| | | Aurelian the Emperour consults the Sibyllæan | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|----|--|----|
| Sibyllæan book, | 34 | of the Temple of Apollo at Delphos, | 58 |
| The Persians spoyl all the Temples of the | | Sambicus throws down brazen Statues, | 59 |
| Greeks. | 35 | and sells them. | 59 |
| without Cratonis, a Temple dedicated to | | Consecrated things taken out of the Tem- | 60 |
| Juno. | 36 | ple to pay Souldiers, | 60 |
| A great barrenness coming to Pelasgus, | | Q. Fulvius Flaccus heavily punished for | |
| they devote the Spring to their gods. | 37 | carrying Marble tiles which were to | |
| A Miracle at the Rock of the Posido- | | mend the Temple of Juno, to the Tem- | |
| niacorians. | 38 | ple of warlike Fortune, | 61 |
| Diana being angry, sends a Calydonian | | An horrible slaughter of the Persian | |
| Boar to destroy the grain in Oecolia, | 39 | coming with intent to spoyl the Tem- | |
| A Miracle in Arcadia, | 40 | ple at Delphos. | 62 |
| Glaucus the son of Sisyphus, | 41 | The Judgment which followed Theron | |
| Hercules erects a magnificent Temple to | | King of the hisher-Spain, upon his | |
| Iolaus his Nephew. | 42 | abolishing the Temple of Hercules, | 63 |
| Ciana kills her Father for deflowring | | The judgment which followed the Scy- | |
| her. | 43 | thians for their spoyling the Temple of | |
| The Temple of Isis. | 44 | Venus in Urania, | 64 |
| The Thebans their severity against those | | The revenge which Alexander received | |
| who violated their Religion. | 45 | for suffering his Souldiers to throng in- | |
| Pentheus King of the Thebans, was | | to the Temple of Ceres, | 65 |
| torn in pieces by the Priestesses of Bac- | | Pyrrhus his punishment for sacrilege, | 66 |
| chus, for abusing his father, | 46 | The punishment of Himilco Prince of | |
| The Pontians extinct for abusing the | | Carthage for his spoyling of Temples, | 67 |
| consecrated things of Bacchus, | 47 | The misery which befell Mithridates for | |
| C. Terentius Varro | 48 | his sacrilege, | 68 |
| Hannibal and Himilco two Carthagi- | | The misery which befell the Grecians for | |
| nian Captains, command their Souldiers | | their spoyling the Temple of Neptune, | 69 |
| to cast down Monuments. | 49 | Sparta shaken with frequent impulsions | |
| The Image of Pallas falls from Heaven, | 50 | of the Earth, | 70 |
| The Athenians neglect their god, | 51 | Cytharœdes flies with his stole to the | |
| The Captains of the Japignians take the | | Altar of Juno, | 71 |
| Images out of the Temple, | 52 | The Temple of warlike Neptune built by | |
| The Æginetæ invading the Epidau- | | Trophimus and Agamedes, | 72 |
| rians, carry away the Olive-Tree Ima- | | The Temple of Jupiter Lycaus in Ar- | |
| ges of Damia Auxesia. | 53 | cadia, | 73 |
| Artabarus a Persian, rushes into Nep- | | The Temple of Eumenides dedicated by | |
| tune's Temple, and falleth upon his | | Orestes in Cenycæa, a City of A- | |
| Image. | 54 | chaia, | 74 |
| A Souldier of Scipio Africanus minor, | | The punishment of Erisichthon for cut- | |
| attempts to bereave the Image of | | ting down the grove of Ceres, | 75 |
| Apollo of his golden Vestment. | 55 | The heavy Judgment which befell Cam- | |
| Agamemnon smote a Goat with a dart | | byses King of Persia, and his Army, | |
| near Diana her grove. | 56 | for burning the Oracle of Jupiter Am- | |
| The Fish Pompilus in esteem with Nep- | | mon, | 76 |
| tune. | 57 | The destruction of the Persians, who burn- | |
| A certain man steals a piece of money out | | ed the Temple of Ceres. | 77 |
| | | The | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|----|--|-----|
| The sad event of revenge, | 78 | The Temple of Pluto and Juno, the den | |
| A Grove dedicated to Æsculapius at | | of Charon, | 90 |
| Coos, | 79 | The Temple of Æsculapius at Epidau- | |
| The ceremonies which the Virgins dedi- | | rus, a City of Peloponnesus, | 91 |
| cated to Diana used, | 80 | The Temple of Minerva Ilias, | 92 |
| The ceremonies which the Boetians used | | The Temple of Hercules in the Beast- | |
| the feast day of Mercury. | 81 | Market at Rome, | 93 |
| A Well, consecrated to the Kestral Virgins | | The Temple of Pallas at Methon, | 94 |
| for the ceasing of the Pestilence. | 82 | Greece troubled with a drought, consults | |
| Phalesius a private man buildeth the | | Pythia, | 95 |
| Temple of Æsculapius, | 83 | The Sepulchre of Aristomenes at Mes- | |
| The god of Heliopolis, | 84 | sene, a City in Aethia in Greece, | 96 |
| A man blind from his birth receives his | | Apollo Libastinus at Pachinum, a | |
| his sight by touching Adrian, | 85 | Promontorie of Sicily, | 97 |
| Ladices sendeth an Image to Venus at | | The Chappel of Minerva before the Tem- | |
| Cyrena, for recovering her husband, | | ple of Delphos, | 98 |
| who was disabled to perform nuptiall | | The Sabine war waged against the Ro- | |
| rights, | 86 | mans for ravishing the Virgins, | 99 |
| Laodomia daughter of Pyrrhus, | 87 | The Holy Sheep of the Sun, | 100 |
| A Goat offers it self a sacrifice to Jupi- | | The superstition of the Philippi inhabit- | |
| ter, | 88 | ing the furthest part of Scandinavia, | 101 |
| The Temple of Ceres Micalcsia, | 89 | | |

A Table of Satan's wonderfull impostures for establisshing of the Idolatrous invocations of Saints departed this life; contrary to the prea- ching of St. Paul, 2 Theff. 2.

| | | | |
|---|---|--|----|
| T He miraculow restauration of John | | Valens the Emperour an Arrian, | 8 |
| Damascen his hand (unjustly cut | | The bodies of eleven thousand Virgins, | 9 |
| off by Theodosius the Emperor) at the | | John, a devout giver of Alms, | 10 |
| Image of the blessed Virgin Mary, | 1 | Conradus repents heartily of his finnes, | |
| A Jew delivered from death, by calling | | and doth penance, | 11 |
| upon the god of Sergius, | 2 | The head of a dead man speaks, | 12 |
| Many cured by the carrying of the dead | | How the Abbey of the King's right | |
| body of the Virgin Levinua through | | hand, came to be so called, | 13 |
| part of Flanders, | 3 | The blessed Virgin Mary appears to St. | |
| Many recover health at the Sepulchre of | | Bruno, | 14 |
| Pope Martin, | 4 | Nicolaus sees the shape of the blessed Vir- | |
| One cured at the grave of St. Ladislaus | | gin and her Son in the ayr, on the ve- | |
| King of Hungary, | 5 | ry day wherein her Conception is cele- | |
| The Bishop of Prague his finger cut off | | brated, | 15 |
| for the Faith of Christ and thrown into | | St. Stephen the Martyr appears to Sa- | |
| a River, shines in a Fishes belly, | 6 | roltha, the Wife of Gtisa Duke of the | |
| Genarius of Beneventum, his head cut | | Hungarians, | 16 |
| off for professing the Faith of Christ, | 7 | The Parents of Nicolas Tolentimates | |

THE TABLE.

| | | | |
|---|----|--|----|
| vow a pilgrimage to Barium, | 17 | The vision of a Priest, | 49 |
| Haldricus the Laodienſian Biſhop cures before the Altar of St. Martin, | 18 | James the ſon of Zebedee appears to Charls the Great, | 46 |
| Sergius, a Prince in wealth and authority, cured of a grievous ſickneſſe at the Temple of St. Michael, | 19 | The appearing of St. Benediſt to Count Sillogoſus in a viſion. | 47 |
| John Orphanotropus, brother to Michael Emperour of Paphlagonia, cured at Mira of a grievous ſickneſſe, | 20 | The Arch-Angel Michael appears in a viſion to Childebert King of France, | 48 |
| Henry the ſecond, Emperour, cured (by interceding Saints) of the Stone, | 21 | Agnes wiſe to Leopold Marqueſs of Auſtria, deſires her huſband to deſign ſome place to build a Monastery, | 49 |
| Manuel, who diſapproved of Images, upon his reſolution to reſtore Images according to the decrees of the Ancients, when he was ſick, was reſtored to health, | 22 | St. Ambroſe appears threatening miſeries to Ceſar, | 50 |
| A Viſion, | 23 | Colanianus King of the Hungarians, his viſion, | 51 |
| A Faſt held in the Church of the Virgin Mary three dayes, to divert the cruel intention of Julian, prevails with God, | 24 | A voyce out of the Statue of the bleſſed Virgin ſalutes St. Bernard, | 52 |
| A Ring brought to King Edward the third from Jeruſalem, | 25 | Medericus Abbot of Edunium, cures a Monk of libidinom cogitations, | 53 |
| The Statue of S. Paul weeps, | 26 | Many cured by a candle, which extinguished, was lighted by the touch of Genovepha, | 54 |
| The Mother of Leo of Iconomarum the fifth King, her Viſion, | 27 | Pope Leo quencherh a fire by the ſign of the Croſs, | 55 |
| Bardus durus his viſion, | 28 | The corporal of the Chalice thrown into a fire, quencherh it. | 56 |
| A Viſion diſcovered to Ambroſe the Mediolanenſian Biſhop, | 29 | A voyce out of the Tomb of S. Martin, | 57 |
| Pulcheria, ſiſter to Theodoſia, her viſion, | 30 | A part of the towel wherewith our Lord wiped his Apoſtles feet before his laſt Supper, brought by Monks from Jeruſalem, | 58 |
| An Apparition to Calomerus, | 31 | St. Peter reſtores a Cock dreſſed and carved, to life again, | 59 |
| A ſtrange Miracle obtained by faſting and prayer, | 32 | The Biſhop of Alexandria by the help of Almighty God converts a Philoſopher, | 60 |
| Pope Urban his Viſion, | 33 | At the Monastery of the holy Mother of God in Conſtantinople, two blind men reſtored to ſight before the Image of the bleſſed Virgin, | 61 |
| A Deacon his viſion, | 34 | The picture of Chriſt which Evagrius made, | 62 |
| Elford King of England his viſion, | 35 | Herbs taken from the Tomb of Nicetius, cure the Feaver, | 63 |
| St. Andrew's croſs ſeen in the ayr, | 36 | A Revelation to Valerius the Coſorannenſian Biſhop, | 64 |
| Dogar King of the Scots, his viſion, | 37 | Miracles wrought at the Sepulchre of Leodegarius, | 65 |
| An Apparition to Uladiſlaus and Griſa, | 38 | Uladiſlaus obtains iſſue by his Wiſe, having | |
| Theodoſius his viſion, | 39 | | |
| Maſſackerus his viſion, | 40 | | |
| The appearing of St. Andrew the Apoſtle to a Prieſt, | 41 | | |
| St. Theodore appears in aſſeſſe of the Romans. | 42 | | |
| Sabinus a moſt pious Patron of Souldiers, | 43 | | |
| The great Sfortia his viſion, | 44 | | |

THE TABLE.

| | |
|---|--|
|  Ang been long barren, by fasting and prayers. 66 The body of Pedastus translated from the place where formerly it lay, works a Miracle, 67 Methodius, a great respecter of holy Ima- ges, most unjustly accused by his ene- mies, is manifestly cleared to the joy of all pious men, 68 St. Peter cures Agatha, virgin and Mar- tyr, her breast torn in pieces for her steadfast confession of the Faith, 70 The Mother of God appeareth to a Carpen- ter, 71 The discovery of the bodies of the Martyrs Dionysius Rusticus and Eleutherius, 72 A woman delivereth her sins in writing to Basil the Great, 73 The Image of Christ speaks, 74 The west Goths, assertors of the Arrian Heresie, 75 Luitprandus King of the Longobards, translates the body of St. Austin out of Sardinia to Ticinum, 76 Adelbertus cured of a Fever at the Temple of S. Mary the Virgin, 77 Genadius Bishop of Constantinople, rebuketh a Priest for disgracing his profession, 78 Some of the dust of Hospitius his Sepul- chre carried to the Lirinenian Mo- nastery as an holy relique, 79 Boniface Bishop of Moguntium slain by the Pagans, 80 Eleven hundred virgins martyred by the Huns, 81 A Leper sees Christ dedicating a Temple, 83 Genovepha dedicateth a Cathedrall Church to St. Dionysius, 84 Houses erected by prayers, 85 The Temple of the divine beautifull vir- gin at Regenspurg, 86 The Metenian Bishop, 88 Constantine adoreth the nails of Christs Cross given him by his Mother, 89 Pope Gregory sends three Sponges to Eu- don, Duke of Aquitaine, 90 A Monk leaving his Religion, marrieth  |  a wife, 91 One carrieth the Body of our Lord at a Paschal Feast whole with him in his mouth, 92 The Sacrament put into a chest by a wo- man, turns into the shape of flesh and blood, 93 The reason of the building the Temple, en- titled, The Body of Christ, 94 Abundance of blood flows from the bles- sed Sacrament of the Eucharist, being torn in pieces by Jews, 95 Pope Vigilius institutes, That Mass for the dead should be performed in an ho- ly place, with holy garments, and a low voyce, 96 An head cast forth of the grave bleedeth, 97 Clodoveus King of France, falls mad for his irreligious handling the body of St. Dionysius, 98 A woman loseth her sight for carrying away the shoes of holy Genovepha, 99 A woman struck barren for kicking the Tomb of a Saint, 100 A Doctor comes to the Tomb of Wence- slaue the fourth Honourable King of Bohemia, 101 The Judgment of God upon one for throw- ing a stone at the Image of the blessed Virgin Mary, 102 The Judgment of God upon one who pull- ed out the eye of an Image, 103 A Jew smites the Image of the blessed Virgin with a punniard, out of which blood flows, 104 Blood flowing from the Image of the bles- sed Virgin, proves a remedy to many sick people, 105 A Souldier seeking to lay hold on an Image, it turns towards him, and he falls mad, 106 Two gamesters, one whereof plaid in the Name of God; the other, in the name of the Devil. 107 Divine vengeance seizeth on Schestrop, for slaying and thrusting through the Image of Christ and his Saints. 108 The Miracles acknowledged, but thought by  |
|---|--|

THE TABLE.

by some to be done by the power of the devill, 109
 The Image of Christ abused by the Jews, bleedeth, 110
 The Judgment of God upon a Jew for abusing the Image of Christ, 111
 The Image of Christ shot with an Arrow,
 bleedeth, 112
 A golden key of St. Peters. 113
 A sacrilegious person struck with a Palsie in the doing of his sacriledge, 114
 An Hermite his vision at the death of Pandulph Prince of Capua, 115
 The Judgment of God upon a sacrilegious person, 116
 Church-cloathes plundered, when they came to be used by prophane hands, appear bloody. 117
 A man's house by divine vengeance set on fire for profaning an holy-day. 118
 A man's head turned backwards in a fearful manner, for working upon an holy-day. 119
 A Jew's cruelty to the Host, and the miraculom issue thereof. 120
 The tongue of a prejudicial man, 121
 St. John Baptist relieves the brother of Bolellaus invoking him. 122
 Comnenus the Emperour being sick, is restored by the Image of our Saviour. 123
 Ptolemey seeks for the Cross. 124
 St. Bernard cures a man mortally wounded, by giving him consecrated bread, 125
 Miracles wrought by the bones of Saint Remachus. 126
 One dispossessed of a devil by part of the straw whereon St. Martin lay. 127
 A Noble-woman ignorantly translates the bones of St. Stephen from Jerusalem to Constantinople. 128
 A Noble-man belonging to Otho the Emperour, dispossessed of a devil by a chain which had bound St. Peter. 129 Several cured of Feavers by the herbs strewed about the Tomb of Nicetius, 130
 The Pestilence at Rome ceaseth upon the building up of the Altar of St. Sebastian in the Church of St. Peter. 131

Constantine the Great his vision after his refusing to be cured by the blood of Children. 132
 St. Nicolas delivers Lotharingus at Constantinople, invoking him. 133
 Bituricus, Arch-deacon of Leons, recovers his sight by fasting and prayers at the Church of Martin, upon his Feast-day. 134
 Pambulis a Priest restored to sight at the Image of Albinus in the Church of St. Peter. 135
 One sick of the Palsie restored to health by St. Martin, and St. Alban. 136
 One sick of the Palsie, restored to health at the Tomb of St. Dunstan. 137
 Cosroe's invoking Sergius, obtains the defence of his Countrey and secu-dity of his barren wife, 138
 A man falleth sick of the head-ach, by driving a nail into St. Peter's picture, 139 Frenchmen about to translate the body of
 S. Benedict, are struck blind. 140
 St. Michael the Arch-Angel appears to
 St. Lawrence. 141
 Three Saints appear to a Fisherman. 142
 Stephen King of Hungary Canonized, 143
 Udislaus King of Hungary Canonized, 144
 Cosroes seeking to take the silver Urn, wherein Sergius the Martyr was laid, was driven away by an heavenly Host, 145 Saints defend the Isaurians from the Sarazens, 146
 A Martyr leadeth the Roman Army, 147
 The Cratonensians use a linnen garment of the Virgin Mary for a flag. 148
 Amiarus a Saint, assists Godfrey of Bolleign in the Syriac Expedition, 149
 St. George, S. Lawrence, and S. Adrian, assist Henry the second, Emperour. 150
 The Romans carrying before them the Holy Lance instead of an Ensign, obtain a great victory. 151
 St.

THE TABLE.

| | |
|--|---|
| S. Ambrose the Mediolanenſian Guar- dian Saint. 152 | A ſoul dragged towards Hell by the de- vil, is freed by S. Benediſt. 173 |
| James the Apoſtle aſſiſts the Chriſtian Army. 153 | Saints ſpeak out of their Tombs. 174 |
| The Fathers of the Nicene Council con- ſult Muſonius and Crifanthus. 154 | Paschaſius a Deacon of the Apoſtolical Seat. 175 |
| Chriſt appeared in the Sacrament to Pler- gilis a Prieſt, in that body which the Virgin Mary bore. 155 | The ſpirit of a dead man waits at the bathes. 176 |
| The viſion which a ſouldier of Rome, who extinguiſhed by the Plague, reſurving, at large he declarerh. 156 | Benediſt the tenth chief Biſhop appearing after his death to John the Portuen- ſian Biſhop confeſſerth, That he was kept from eternal death by Odilones his prayer. 177 |
| A noble child dead for ſeven dayes, reſur- veth. 157 | John the Anchorite his viſion. 178 |
| Vincentius his relation of Tundalus. 158 | Maurice the Rorhamagenſian Biſhop brought into the Temple after his death, having received his ſoul, ſpeaks to them about him. 179 |
| Vincentius his relation of one who be- ing led by the Angel Gabriel after death was reſtored to life. 159 | Marcins of Alexandria obſeſſing the ſkull of a dead man in the name of Je- ſus, cauſerh it to ſpeak. 180 |
| Genovepha, a virgin of Paris, in an extaſie. 160 | Cyrellus Hieroſolymitanus his viſion as he was praying. 181 |
| Erasmus Biſhop and Martyr. 161 | A young man reſtored to life by the pray- ers and tears of Severus. 182 |
| Urfius ſees S. Peter and S. Paul at his death. 162 | A man dead reſurves, relates his viſion. 183 |
| Ezekiel and Daniel appear to a Reli- giouſman. 163 | Stephen a Roman going to Rome, falls ſick and dyes, and reſurves again, and relaterh his viſion during the time his ſoul was ſeparated from his body. 184 |
| The viſion of Merulus a religious Monk at Rome. 164 | William, a boy of fifteen years of age, his viſion. 185 |
| St. Peter the Apoſtle appears to a Virgin called Galla, at Rome. 165 | In the Sabine Province a Nun ſtrictly obſerved chaſtity, but by prociſity de- files her tongue; as appears by a viſion after her death, is condignly puniſhed. 186 |
| The Mother of God with a company of Virgins, appears to a Maid. 166 | The Sadduces and Epicures confuted, from page 343. to page 358. |
| Juvenal and Eleutherius the Martyrs, appear to Probus Reatinus the Bi- ſhop. 167 | The Arguments of thoſe who deny, that Angels and Devils can take to them a body, confuted; from page 359. to the end. |
| The body of St. Jerome, when he had gi- ven up his ſoul, was ſurrounded with a ſuddain glorious light. 168 | |
| A Monk wrapt in ſpirit ſees St. Au- guſtine. 169 | |
| St. Francis Aſſiaſius his ſoul departs in form of a Star out of his body. 170 | |
| Devils contend with an Angel for the ſoul of a Monk. 171 | |
| Maſs celebrated before a dead Monk. 172 | |

FINIS.

